THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

Meet The World Leadership Alliance, The World Economic Council, Club de Madrid. These people are only concerned for your welfare. They know better than you how to run your life! They are all for 'Global Prosperity and Security'.

Newly elected member for Fairfax – 'Professor' Clive Palmer – is right up there with rest of them. One would have thought he had enough on his plate looking after the Australian citizens in his electorate. Not so, he has grander plans that this.

The blurb states: "The World Leadership Alliance is especially focused on enabling the transition of non- democratic countries to democracy. It aims to achieve this by engaging business, political, academic and other leaders of society to shape global, regional and industry agendas."

Please note the following: -

DATES FOR ANNUAL CHRISTMAS/NEW YEAR BREAK: The League 'Hub' in Melbourne will be closing from Friday 13th December, 2013 and re-opening Monday 6th January 2014. The hardworking League stalwarts will be taking their well-earned rest.

Now is the time to get all book orders in. The League carries an excellent range of topical books for that special Christmas gift. To be sure orders are processed before the Christmas break instructions should be received by the 11th December 2013. Books can also be ordered online <http://www.veritasbooks.com.au/>

TARGETS FOR THE WEEK

Please support Senator John Madigan's Petition opposing ownership of Australian land—see page 2.

Write letters and question the ramifications to the Australian people of the Trans Pacific Partnership—see page 3.

It is sad to see the Governor General reigniting debate on a republic for Australia which already has a 'system of government' equal to any in the world.

The arguments for an Australian republic are 'hollow' and have been rejected several times over— see page 10.

Book List—pages 11 & 12

All the books listed are interesting reading but Grant Lock's adventures in Afghanistan and Pakistan working in overseas aid is highly recommended if you have a 'belief in Christian charity'. It reveals a 'first-hand' clash in philosophies.

A special present for young people and those outside the League.

ON THAT FATEFUL DAY IN 1963, Mary McCosker, November 2013

Clive Staples
Lewis

Clive Staples Lewis: the feelings that passes through one, on reading passages from his writings, I can only describe as like being inside an opening flower; as it opens, all one's submerged and jumbled thoughts on the many and same subjects he brings to light, suddenly fall into enlightening order, such as causes and effects, reasons, remedies, et. al. It is uplifting to realise such men as C.S. Lewis have existed. God willing, there are many undiscovered in store for us. Such men as C. S. Lewis keep a real glimmer of hope alive.

Lachlan Dunjey wrote: On a fateful day in 1963, the 50th anniversary of which we celebrate on 22 November, three prophets died, the death of two eclipsed by the dramatic assassination of the third.

The death of the Declared Hedonist overshadowed the deaths of the Declared Atheist and the Declared Christian. The Declared Hedonist was prophetic in his wisdom and in recognising the evil nature of his enemy and we do well today to learn from his practical wisdom and insight into evil. JFK – John Fitzgerald Kennedy – was indeed a great statesman albeit flawed in his humanity. I do hope there was a sense in which he acknowledged God and laid himself before Him.

John
Fitzgerald
Kennedy

The Declared Atheist of course was none other than Aldous Leonard Huxley – three initials again – and as you know he was wonderfully prophetic. In 1931 he described in Brave New World a laboratory in which fertilized human ova would break into separate buds, each maturing into an embryo that could be genetically manipulated for various roles and purposes.

There are no prizes for those of you who know me to deduce the identity of the Declared Christian – arguably one of the greatest writers and apologists ever – yes, Clive Staples Lewis, again known by his initials, hardly ever by his two given names. His work is major: in an incredible and prophetic series of lectures in 1943 at the University of Durham, subsequently published as The Abolition of Man, he talks about 'men without chests' or adults who lack moral formation and moral character, who divorce their head from their hearts, who use their 'head' but lose their 'chest.'

Lewis writes: 'In a sort of ghastly simplicity we remove the organ and demand the function. We make men without chests and expect of them virtue and enterprise. We laugh at honour and are shocked to find traitors in our midst. We castrate and bid the geldings be fruitful. The practical result of (such) education... must be the destruction of the society which accepts it'.

MORE PRESSURE/ACTION AGAINST FOREIGN OWNERSHIP NEEDED

John Madigan,
www.wewontsellout.com.au Since my last correspondence with you, I have been very busy lobbying the Government to take seriously our concerns of foreign ownership of Australian agricultural land. Having sent a letter to the Minister for Agriculture Barnaby Joyce in early October, his office last week indicated that he may have time to discuss related matters with me.

Realising how slow the Government can be when responding to these challenges, on Thursday (November 14) I moved a motion (details below) which was defeated on the floor of the Senate. This was particularly disappointing, as I was hoping that some further ground may be made with this campaign. However, it is now clearer than ever that our Government just doesn't think it's a big issue.

Although the Government has supposedly committed to providing a review through the Foreign Investment Review Board, no timeframe has been committed to and I believe, as I'm sure you do too, that this is an issue that requires action in the immediate future.

The motion was supported by Senator Nick Xenophon and the Greens, however the Coalition and the ALP couldn't find it in themselves to support it.

For this reason, I ask that you contact your local senator and implore him/her to sign up to the We Won't Sell Out campaign.

You can easily find your local senator's details here.

Motion: That the Senate—

(a) notes that:

(i) in 2010 the Australian Bureau of Statistics published the Agricultural Land and Water Ownership survey (December 2010), which indicated that 11.3 per cent of Australian agricultural land was foreign-owned,

(ii) according to the Australian Broadcasting Corporation's Vote Compass, a significant majority of Australians want to 'further restrict foreign ownership of Australian agricultural land', and

(iii) Australian agricultural land is a national treasure and should not be treated as a global commodity; and (b) calls on the Government to table, no later than the first sitting day of 2014, an updated Agricultural Land and Water Ownership survey, outlining foreign ownership of Australian agricultural land as at June 2013.

WHAT! NO SLAVERY WITH FREE TRADE? WHAT'S THE WORLD COMING TO? by James Reed.

Mining millionaire Andrew Forrest has launched a global slave index in London and has said that slavery was "as common as church mice, and an insistence on an enforced labour-proof supply chain in any trade agreement should be fundamental". (The Australian 17 October 2013, p.2) This all comes as Tony Abbott is set to put in place the Trans-Pacific Partnership which will produce the Asia-Pacific part of the New World Order.

We have not been told about this agreement which will effectively eliminate the nation state – and we haven't been told because this minimises any problems for the ultra-Satanic global financial elite getting their perverse thrills from destroying all that is human. The fact that Mr. Forrest is concerned about slavery and forced labour is some indication of the likely evils that may come from the Trans-Pacific Partnership and globalism. Good on him for discussing this issue.

Write now to Tony Abbott and ask for a copy of the Trans-Pacific Partnership agreement. Ask how he intends to preserve Australian sovereignty in the face of special tribunals that will have greater powers than the Australian courts? Ask him, when did he consult the Australian people about this? And then, concerned Australians need to stage protests across the country. Join up with the unions and even the Leftists – I don't care. I will even march holding a feminist's hand!

IF I WERE A RICH MAN from Gilad Atzmon:

If I were a Rich Man – Rothschilds and the Yearn for Mammon 16th November 2013:

Many people are familiar with Fiddler on the Roof, the 1960's musical set in Tsarist Russia in 1905. The musical is based on Tevye and his Daughters (or Tevye the Dairyman), as well as other tales by Sholem Aleichem. The most memorable tune from this Jewish American musical was 'If I Were a Rich Man'. I guess that not many would know that the musical was also translated into Hebrew and Yiddish. However, the translator of the Hebrew and Yiddish shows took some liberties in their adaptation; they decided to appeal to the Jewish imagination, by means of concretisation. 'If I Were A Rich Man' became, 'If I Were A Rothschild.' In this video clip you can witness and listen to the Yiddish performer cry for Mammon. That crude materialistic yearn is manifested both visually and lyrically. The clip is a real estate tour de force, you are invited to prospect the extended list of Rothschild Family's Palaces. For some reason the Israeli Knesset is also presented towards the end. I guess that at least within the context of Jewish culture, the Jewish State and its Parliament, is a Rothschild property.

MORE ON THE TPP – THIS TIME FROM WIKILEAKS

WikiLeaks has published the secret text to part of the biggest U.S. trade deal in history, the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP). For the past several years, the United States and 12 Pacific Rim nations have been negotiating behind closed doors on the sweeping agreement.

A cartoon published by WikiLeak along with the leaked draft.

A 95-page draft of a TPP chapter released by WikiLeak details agreements relating to patents, copyright, trademarks and industrial design — showing their wide-reaching implications for Internet services, civil liberties, publishing rights and medicine accessibility. Critics say the deal could rewrite U.S. laws on intellectual property rights, product safety and environmental regulations, while backers say it will help create jobs and boost the economy. President Obama and U.S. Trade Representative Michael Froman reportedly wish to finalize the TPP by the end of the year and are pushing Congress to expedite legislation that grants the president something called "fast-track authority". However, this week some 151 House Democrats and 23 Republicans wrote letters to the administration saying they are unwilling to give the president free rein to "diplomatically legislate".

A transcript of the debate on the TPP between Bill Watson, a trade policy analyst at the Cato Institute, and Lori Wallach, director of Public Citizen's Global Trade Watch is available here...

The Trans-Pacific Partnership and Australia's right to know, Dr. Patricia Ranald:

The University of Sydney Source: The Conversation. In the history of trade agreement negotiations, most have been undertaken in secret, justified on the grounds that the governments' negotiating positions would be weakened if they became public. But this justification is losing credibility as trade agreements increasingly deal with regulatory issues normally determined through public democratic and parliamentary processes. Concern over the transparency of TPP negotiations grew after it was revealed negotiating documents could not be released until four years after the completion of the negotiations.

The Trans-Pacific Partnership negotiations involve the US, Australia and ten other Pacific Rim governments - six of which have bilateral trade agreements with the US. There have been 19 rounds of negotiations held over three years in different countries, and there is now pressure to finish by the end of 2013. The US is driving the agenda, and its objectives are not entirely about trade in goods, but to establish US-style regional regulatory frameworks which meet the demands of its major export industries. These include pharmaceuticals, media, information technology, agribusiness and financial services, all of which are demanding changes to other governments' domestic regulation. This "architecture for a 21st century trade agreement" is clearly designed to meet US economic and strategic interests, but not those of other countries.

Countries involved in the proposed Trans-Pacific Partnership.

MASSIVE 'FREE TRADE' TREATY:

"Massive Free-Trade Treaty Looks Great For The US", Michael Kelley 14 November, 2013: The Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP) involves a 12-nation regional trade bloc that accounts for almost 40% of global gross domestic product (GDP) and about one-third of all world trade. The U.S. is leading negotiations and expects them to be finished this year. The average person may not have heard of the TPP, which also involves Australia, Brunei, Chile, Canada, Japan, Malaysia, Mexico, New Zealand, Peru, Singapore and Vietnam. Experts believe it will be very important. Ian Bremmer has called it "most important trade agreement on the world agenda right now," for example, pointing out that almost 40 per cent of world GDP would be involved in the deal.

However, critics have two major concerns about the TPP:

- The first argument is that TPP's intentions are far more radical than most realise, with lobbyists pushing an agenda that would suit the globalization aims of multinational corporations, not the average person — in particular with restrictive intellectual property laws. The second concern is that the process is being conducted in secret, and the public is being left in the dark — as Cory Doctorow of Boing Boing points out, it's a deal "negotiated in utmost secrecy, without public participation, whose text is still not public." That a deal of this magnitude is being conducted in secret is understandably worrying, and there have been some leaks, but the full text of the proposed agreement remains out of the hands of the public...."

Re Politics... from Wallace Klink

While it seems rather harsh and generalized, there is, alas, much truth in the fact that decent people do enter into the political arena but all too often they become co-opted or otherwise devoured by the system which seeks to defend or preserve itself and which instinctively regards principled individuals as more of a threat than a boon to their objectives. I think that we must resist the temptation to become so jaded that we despair of the whole matter and simply abandon involvement in attempts to improve the lot of humanity. Surely we must remember also that self-serving behaviour often stems from insecurity and we all, including politicians, develop from birth in a grossly flawed financial-economic and philosophical system in which the basic survival instinct engenders selfish behaviour. Perhaps one might say that this is no excuse for anti-social behaviour but the dynamics of human action are perhaps not well understood and we should remember to be slow to judge, not having walked necessarily in the same shoes as others. In any case, there can be no future in either abandonment or mere condemnation. If we truly believe in the principles contained in Christian teaching and that they embody the practical and philosophical means to a rational and abundant, and spiritual, life then surely there exists no option but to devote our all to that noble cause. So let us become neither discouraged nor weakened in faith. Does not the fact that we are enabled to envision a better world not indicate the very possibility of such a dispensation? Faith, it is said, can move mountains—but faith accompanied by truth is probably better equipped to accomplish the task. In this regard Social Credit claims to embody a critical element of truth and surely the task of Social Crediters is to share this knowledge with the World.

A TASTE OF WHAT CHINA IS REALLY LIKE? by James Reed

The China territory disputes is a clear illustration of China's future direction. China is laying claim to almost all of South China Sea. There are thus territorial disputes with The Philippines, Brunei, Malaysia, Vietnam and of course, Japan.

The Philippines is taking action under the UN Convention on the Law of the Sea, of which China is a signatory. China has said that it will ignore the legal proceedings. No doubt it is waiting for the US to further decay before taking by force the vast reserves of oil and natural gas in the area. The Asian century is set to be a time of war and conflict in the setting sun of this civilisation. Soon we will get a real taste of China's agenda and its real feelings about a "century of humiliation".

DO CLIMATE CHANGE POLICIES LINE UP WITH TECHNOCRACY'S IDEAS?

Technocracy advocates that:

- In order to operate the economy, Carbon Rationing Energy Certificates must be issued individually to every adult of the population.
- The record of one's income and its rate of expenditure kept by the Distribution Sequence to ascertain the state of customer's balance.
- When making purchases of either goods or services an individual surrenders the Energy Certificates properly identified and signed. Money is generic to the holder while Energy Certificates expire.

During Cancun COP16 – calls for a return to WWII style rationing by Anthony Watts

DATE...November 29, 2010

<http://wattsupwiththat.com/2010/11/29/during-cancun-cop16-calls-for-a-return-to-wwii-style-rationing/>

My parents used to talk about rationing during the war with great apprehension. Clearly the nutters in and supporting Cancun are clueless as to how such a scheme would be viewed by the public. My inbox has lit up today from all around the world over this issue. Short of Climategate itself, I haven't quite seen any other similar reaction.

Excerpts from the Telegraph: Cancun climate change summit: scientists call for rationing in developed world. Global warming is now such a serious threat to mankind that climate change experts are calling for Second World War-style rationing in rich countries to bring down carbon emissions.

In a series of papers published by the Royal Society, physicists and chemists from some of world's most respected scientific institutions, including Oxford University and the Met Office, agreed that current plans to tackle global warming are not enough.

In one paper Professor Kevin Anderson,

ON TARGET

Director of the Tyndall Centre for Climate Change Research, said the only way to reduce global emissions enough, while allowing the poor nations to continue to grow, is to halt economic growth in the rich world over the next twenty years. Prof Anderson admitted it "would not be easy" to persuade people to reduce their consumption of goods. He said politicians should consider a rationing system similar to the one introduced during the last "time of crisis" in the 1930s and 40s. This could mean a limit on electricity so people are forced to turn the heating down, turn off the lights and replace old electrical goods like huge fridges with more efficient models. Food that has travelled from abroad may be limited and goods that require a lot of energy to manufacture.

"The Second World War and the concept of rationing is something we need to seriously consider if we are to address the scale of the problem we face," he said. Full story: Cancun climate change summit: scientists call for rationing in developed world The Telegraph, 29 November 2010.

UN's "Climate Change" to Transform the Economic Structure of the World Radical Environmentalism vs. Jobs and the Economy by Cathie Adams, Eagle Forum.

Video: <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=DPQMV4XZZ54> UNFCCC opening press briefing at COP 19/CMP 9

"Regardless, consensus is the way major decisions are made by the UN, not votes. In Warsaw, the UN is seeking consensus on three objectives before the meeting concludes on November 22 (<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=DPQMV4XZZ54>):

- Clarification of finance for its Green Climate Fund, which could mean a global tax scheme to transfer wealth from rich to poor countries.
  - Creation of a "loss and damage" mechanism to compensate poor nations that suffer climate-related tragedies like the typhoon that just happened in the Philippines and is the focal point for funding pleas in Warsaw. Americans have already sent at least $100 million, plus food, medicine and troops.
- Clarification of elements for a draft of next year's meeting document in Lima, Peru. The UN has predetermined that a new legally binding treaty to replace the 1997 Kyoto Protocol will be completed in Paris, France in 2015 and will go into affect in 2020.

The European Climate Foundation based in The Hague, is a typical green — ignore the science — organization that uses United Nations meetings to push radical environmentalism to destroy liberties, kill jobs and industries, and lower our standard of living..."

Productive capacity is not the problem – it is the distribution system that is at fault!

The above report from The Eagle Forum is typical of most folk in their attitude to the present world situation. Of course humans have no control over Nature's climate change, but humans do – or should - have control over their environment. That is if Mammon did not control them and their institutions, both directly and indirectly. What they do not grasp is that physically the industrialised, technological, automated production systems can produce more than enough for every citizen of a modern nation, it is the distribution of that production that we should be looking at - there is the problem. Until they come to grips with understanding how the financial system is cheating them and rise up and throw mammon out, nothing will change for the better.

Andrew Bolt Blog, 19 November 2013:

At the Commonwealth Heads of Government Colombo meeting, Australia has for the first time negotiators can recall caused the communique to record a split:

As an extraordinary Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting concluded in Colombo, Mr Abbott joined with Canada in rejecting a decision by the summit to push for a Green Capital Fund to help vulnerable island states and poor African countries address the effects of rising sea levels, prolonged droughts, or catastrophic weather incidents, caused by climate change...

But the final agreement from the 53 members of the Anglosphere Commonwealth noted that "Australia and Canada... indicated they could not support a Green Capital Fund at this time".

Greg Sheridan: The Prime Minister refused to back language in the communique supporting the establishment of an international Green Fund... Canada backed the Australian position.

As a result, for the first time in its history the CHOGM leaders' communique included a statement that some member nations did not support a specific provision of the communiqué.

WHAT IS MONEY – WHAT IS ITS NATURE?

In a 1947 presentation “A Defence of Free Enterprise and the Profit Motive”, Eric D. Butler dealt with the same sort of proposals now being put forth by the Technocrats worldwide. It was proposed a ‘coupon system’ be put in place to replace the ‘faltering’ money system and the wasteful ‘free enterprise’ system. Please note a free enterprise system of production IS NOT a ‘free market’ system. (<http://www.alor.org/Library/DefenceofFreeEnterprise.htm>)

Eric wrote:

(1) In a real democratic society the individual has the power to have his directions carried into effect, to get the results he desires - presuming, of course, that they are practical.

Two different types of organisation are required for this:

- (a) political organisations, controlled by the political vote, and
(b) economic organisations, controlled by the money vote.
- (2) The political vote can only be effectively used to lay down general rules under which the economic organisations shall function, to ensure that correct relationships are maintained between individuals and their economic organisations. To clarify this matter a little further by a simple example of what is meant, a Government can lay down a road system, traffic rules and erect sign posts. But it is not its function to tell motorists where and when to travel. Any Government which tried to decide what thousands of individual motorists desired, would inevitably impose tyranny.
- (3) A system of free enterprise, motivated by the desire for Profit, and serving consumers who indicate by their money votes what they want, will give the individual the greatest material standard of living and the greatest personal freedom. Where industry is governed by Profit as an economic calculator, industry is organised on the most efficient basis. In the last analysis this results in the great majority of people entering that sphere of economic activity in which they are most genuinely interested.

The Menace of Government Control of Banking

“... we can [now] examine several of the main points made by Professor Barker (a Canberra bureaucrat of the time). His major point appears to be that Finance dominates industry - although it is not clear what this had to do with the “Profit Motive”. Most of us will probably agree with Professor Barker that the creation of financial credit by the banking system, and the loaning of this credit to industry, does, to a very considerable extent, permit Finance to dominate Industry.

But when Professor Barker says: “it is obvious that Government control of financial operations along modern reasonable lines is inevitable,” he is suggesting a most dangerous policy. Government control of financial operations can only result in the complete centralisation of the financial system under the domination of totalitarian planners at Canberra, who would thus be able to plan production by extending or withholding credit as they thought fit.

The well-known Socialist, Mr. G. D. H. Cole, aptly summed up the Socialist viewpoint when he said: “With the banks in our hands, we can take over the other industries at our leisure.” (This they did...ed)

Fundamental Nature of Money – Nothing More Than a Claim to Wealth:

To continue, Eric writes: In spite of much nonsense to the contrary, the fundamental nature of money is simply that of a token carrying the agreement to deliver over, on demand, the article to which the token refers. We must realise that the money system is a wonderful distributive system and is functioning correctly when it is distributing to the people what they are physically capable of producing.

The Claim was issued by the Producer of the Wealth

Bearing in mind that any form of money, coins, paper currency, or financial credit, is nothing more than a claim to wealth, it is interesting to recall that when money was first invented, the claim to wealth was issued by the producer of the wealth. Economic sovereignty resided in the producer of wealth...

Examples of Ancient Stamp Seals

- C. H. Douglas:

To insert C. H. Douglas here: “The fact must be realised that the wealth of the world is really produced by production; the tickets which are the effective demand for that wealth are produced by the financial system; and the two things are not necessarily connected at all. You can grow wheat until your barns are filled to bursting point, and you can manufacture motor cars until your roads are black with them; and yet you will not increase by one penny so far as those processes are concerned, the amount of purchasing power in the world. I want to point out to you how it comes about that the ticket system has become separated from the production system or the transportation system. Just imagine what you would say, what you would think, if you were called upon to build a railway, if you had to provide all the work and all the material, and then somebody set out in the principal towns to establish a ticket office from which to issue the tickets for that railway as a monopoly.

Yet that is the sort of thing that is happening in the world at the present time. I want to show you what has taken place, how that state of affairs has come about because I think it is explanatory of the present position. If we go back to the beginnings of the money system, the recorded beginnings that are well authenticated, we find that wealth was represented by cattle. The owner of the cattle, of course, very often bartered some of his cattle for grain in order to feed the rest of his cattle. The man who grew or sold the grain was an itinerant vendor who moved about, and he got into the habit of taking from the owner of the cattle a round disc of leather, and sometimes that disc bore the imprint of a rude image of a cow's head, and sometimes it did not. We have a reminder of that fact in the words that we use at the present time. We talk about a money transaction as being a pecuniary transaction, and the word “pecuniary” comes from the Latin “pecu,” which means cattle.

The producer also controlled his own money system

Now when this state of affairs was in existence there was also one very extraordinary fact - the owner of the cattle, the owner of the wealth, and the owner of the money, the owner of the leather discs, comprised really one and the same person. So there you had the production system and the money system concentrated under the one control, in the one set of hands. Obviously a system like that could not be expected to work for very long. Some bright gentleman no doubt got the idea of punching out a few additional bits of leather, and that was really the first form of inflation.

Read further. <http://www.alor.org/Library/Monopolistic%20Idea.htm>

To continue Eric Butler

We can trace the evolution of the money system from this time, through the period when various types of wealth was deposited with the goldsmiths, whose receipts were soon adopted as negotiable bills of exchange, to the present time when practically all our money is created by the banking system in the form of financial credit.

The credit system, operated by a very efficient banking system, has made possible our modern intricate system of production and distribution. There are undoubtedly good arguments in favour of modifying the present financial policy, which is not permitting free enterprise to function, as it should, but under no circumstances should Government control of the financial system be permitted by a people who appreciate freedom...

The Totalitarian Planners

But the totalitarian planners visualise the financial system, not as a means to providing the people with decentralised economic power which they can use to further their individual policies, but as an instrument of control which will effectively destroy the sovereignty of the money vote... When production is effectively controlled by totalitarians using the Government as the instrument to impose their policies on the people, even the money left to individuals after heavy taxation has been levied, can only be used to buy what the Planners permit to be produced. The main characteristic of money, as we now understand it, is destroyed; it is little better than a coupon.

But Professor Barker appears to be an advocate of the coupon system.

He asks: "Why not distribute through the coupon and eliminate finance?" The coupon system is economic centralisation of the most vicious type and places the individual at the mercy of the bureaucracy which must control the coupon system. It only permits the individual to obtain what the Government decides shall be produced. And the individual can only get his coupons if he does as he is told... People who desire freedom must resist any attempts to destroy the value of that unique voting system, the money system, a system which permits the individual to decide what free enterprise, governed by the "Profit Motive," shall produce. A free man is one who can accept or reject any proposition put before him. The money vote, free enterprise, and the "Profit Motive" are the basis of genuine freedom..."

MORE MYTHS ABOUT OVERSEAS STUDENTS by Richard Miller

The headline read "Overseas Students Overtake the Locals" (The Australian 16 October, 2013 p.27) – the sort of news the globalists and immigrationists love. The article begins:

"Criticism of foreign students and their academic standards is passé now that they have begun to outperform domestic students". Suspicious yet? Not so long ago we wrote about the problem of foreign student standards, and now they are star performers. What gives?

Researcher Alan Olsen has "data to show they are boosting our academic standards". On the 2012 progress rates for commencing bachelor students, a measure of how successful they are in passing subjects they attempt, the pass rate for foreign students was 84.68 percent compared with 83.64 percent for domestic students.

Olsen does not believe that international fee-paying students are being given an easy pass as "soft marking would require academics across the country to conspire". He said, incredibly: "They've all got together in the pub one afternoon and agree". Well no, this need not be so. A common structural or institutional cause could produce the same effect.

Each marker is actually under pressure to pass international students so that they complete their course – otherwise if they fail they may give up and go home. Locals are a captive audience so failure is a real option. I have heard from lecturers across the country that there is an "agreement" and culture of getting foreign students through. In a competitive market, no university wants a reputation for tough marking. There have been past studies showing that internationals had inflated marks. As well, the evidence is consistent with a fall in the standard of domestic students as more students were taken into the system because of lower ATAR, entry scores. So foreign students may not be such high performers after all. Finally, working at my old university once or twice a week to assess materials, I am aware of large groups of foreign students getting together to complete work assignments. This is clearly plagiarism. I have been told by a friend studying languages at one university that the foreign students get together to complete on-line exams, which are not supervised. They are not the only ones – whites do it too. It seems that wherever possible, students take an opportunity to cheat. So given this, we can't put too much faith into reports about rising standards of anyone.

THE MACHINE STOPS Series by Arnis Luks

My brother John and I went to visit our bees to see how they were faring. We discovered the beehive condition and honey production were both down for this time of year. The bees were bringing pollen into the hives to feed the larvae, so the laying-up of eggs had started, but other indications are that it is not a particularly good season.

Brother John says we have not had a good honey season for over 4 years.

When John looks for different spots to place the bees he takes note of the naturally occurring eucalypts in that area. The scrub has developed over eons to be what it is whereas when we plant out any type of plant, even eucalypt to our local environment we may not necessarily be doing the best for it and the bees. I was fascinated to hear that after a bush fire goes through, the very plants the soil needs to regenerate are what germinate first. They go deep into the soil to capture and then release the required nutrients. Nature returns to right order what has been previously damaged.

There was a time I believed the presence of frogs indicated the good state of the local environment, but I now look to the bees. The damage being done to bees (Colony Collapse Disorder*) says that collectively, we are going against the grain of nature. Frankenstein food, frankenstein chemicals, frankenstein **geo-engineering (in particular the weather manipulation) and the military-industrial complex destroying all that stands in their way to profit. Government, in cahoots with these groups, has lost contact with their people and the environment in appeasing their money masters. There is also a deafening silence almost to the point of active collaboration from the green movement to this rampant abuse of the environment.

It is in everyone's best interest to look after the environment, in particular quality and reliability with every purchase or trade. This does not just apply to mechanical devices. Australians now spend more on medical than they do on food. It is back to front. Beata has taught me well to only purchase organic produce to ensure the food value or life force is there. By doing this and significantly reducing our meat intake we now spend next to nothing on medical. My weight is down and blood pressure is excellent. So in all this we need to grow as much locally as possible and house bees near our homes or community gardens – neighbours permitting. We have allowed the machine to take us in the wrong direction.

* The mechanisms of Colony Collapse Disorder and the reasons for its increasing prevalence remain unclear, but many possible causes have been proposed: pesticides (in particular, those of the neonicotoid class); infections with Varroa and Acarapis mites; malnutrition; various pathogens; genetic factors; immuno-deficiencies; loss of habitat; changing beekeeping practices; electromagnetic radiation from electronic communication devices; or a combination of factors.

Psalm 51:10-15. Create in me a clean heart, O God, and put a new and right spirit within me. Cast me not away from thy presence, and take not thy Holy Spirit from me. Restore to me the joy of thy salvation, and uphold me with a willing spirit. Then I will teach transgressors thy ways, and sinners will return to thee. O Lord, open thou my lips, and my mouth shall show forth thy praise.

The next two pages: "For Your Attention" by Louis Cook

Raise the pension age to 70, so says the Productivity Commission (www.pc.gov.au/)

The Productivity Commission is the Australian Government's independent research and advisory body on a range of economic, social and environmental issues affecting the welfare of Australians. Its role, expressed simply, is to "help governments make better policies in the long term interest of the Australian community".

The Productivity Commission has warned in a report that reveals the ageing of the population is a much bigger threat (to whom?) than previous Treasury reports have suggested. Besides lifting the retirement age to 70, the commission urges that elderly people pay for their care by giving up equity in their homes.

With modern manufacturing equipment etc., fewer jobs are available; most surely the purpose of 'labour saving' devices.

Reality is that we have created a world where a great many men and women are no longer required to work full time and those that do get poorly rewarded. We should not be taxing the earnings of those that do work instead we should share the benefits of increased leisure time brought about by advances in technology.

It would be far better to reduce the pension age to 50 years and make room for younger people to acquire skills at the best time of their lives.

In a recent commentary on the World Chess Championships with the youthful Magnus Carlsen, aged 22 playing "Vishy" Anand who is 43 years old, was discussion on the likely outcome.

Psychologist Timothy Salthouse and colleagues have shown that the performance in cognitive tests (typically referred as "fluid intelligence") reaches its peak at the early 20s and then slowly decreases with age.

Given that chess is the quintessential cognitive game, you may think that this data suggests that Carlsen has a huge advantage.

Not so fast! Research has also shown that the accumulation of knowledge (also referred as "crystallised intelligence") does not stop until the age of 60.

From this assessment it would appear youth today are being intellectually abused by governments by not encouraging them to challenge their abilities with easier access to work opportunities. Lowering the work retiring age would help youth into the workplace at a time when their 'cognitive ability' was at its best.

Now back to the Productivity Commission; it appears all they can suggest are socialist solutions. Everybody must work and by older people giving up equity in their homes there will be little or nothing left to be inherited whilst implementing another plank in Marx's ten steps to the Communist State... abolition of the right of inheritance.

Earlier this month Australians commemorated Remembrance Day but it seems little was gained by the survivors if all that can be offered is work from the cradle to the grave.

Better to send the Productivity Commission packing along with the Climate Commission.

Send a clear message to your elected Representatives that raising the pension age will not be tolerated.

THE ORIGINAL STORY OF THE ANT AND THE GRASSHOPPER

The ant works hard in the withering heat all summer long, building his house and laying up supplies for the winter.

The grasshopper thinks he's a fool, and laughs and dances and plays the summer away.

Come winter, the ant is warm and well fed. The shivering grasshopper has no food or shelter, so he dies out in the cold.

THE MODERN AUSTRALIAN VERSION

The ant works hard in the withering heat all summer long, building his house and laying up supplies for the winter.

The grasshopper thinks he's a fool, and laughs and dances and plays the summer away.

Come winter, the ant is warm and well fed.

The shivering grasshopper calls a press conference and demands to know why the ant should be allowed to be warm and well fed while others less fortunate like him are cold and starving.

The ABC and Channel 9 show up to provide live coverage of the shivering grasshopper, with cuts to a video of the ant in his comfortable warm home with a table filled with food.

Australians are stunned that in a country of such wealth, this poor grasshopper is allowed to suffer so while others have plenty.

The Socialist Alliance, the Greens and the Coalition Against Poverty demonstrate in front of the ant's house.

The ABC, interrupting an Aboriginal cultural festival special from North Queensland with breaking news, broadcasts them singing, "We Shall Overcome".

Christine Milne grants an interview with Tony Jones that the ant has got rich off the backs of grasshoppers, and calls for an immediate tax hike on the ant to make him pay his fair share.

In response to polls, the Liberal Government drafts the Economic Equity and Grasshopper Anti-Discrimination Act, retrospective to the beginning of the summer.

It is quickly passed through the Senate. The ant taxes are reassessed and he is also fined for failing to hire grasshoppers as helpers.

Without enough money to pay both the fine and his newly imposed retrospective taxes, his home is confiscated by the government.

The ant moves to Asia, and starts a successful agribiz company buying up Australian land.

The TV stations later show the now fat grasshopper finishing up the last of the ant's food though Spring is still months away, while the government-owned house he is in, which just happens to be the ant's old house, crumbles around him because he hadn't maintained it.

Inadequate government funding is blamed, Tim Flannery is now appointed to head a commission of inquiry that will cost $10,000,000.

The grasshopper is soon dead of a drug overdose; the Sydney Morning Herald blames it on obvious failure of government to address the root causes of despair arising from social inequity.

The abandoned house is taken over by a gang of immigrant spiders who are praised by the government for enriching Australia's multicultural diversity and who then promptly terrorize the community.

THE Queen's representative in Australia has reignited the republic debate by being the first serving Governor-General to publicly call for an Australian Head of State.

From News.com 23 November 2013

Quentin Bryce, who will retire in March, also supported gay marriage in a landmark speech urging greater respect and care for all Australians.

Delivering the ABC Boyer Lecture in Sydney, Ms Bryce said her vision was for a country "where people are free to love and marry whom they choose and where perhaps my friends, one day, one young girl or boy may even grow up to be our nation's first Head of State".

Greens leader Christine Milne congratulated Ms Bryce "for strong advocacy of marriage equality, a republic and an ethic of care. Real leadership". Prime Minister Tony Abbott who led the campaign against a republic in 1999 is expected to soon announce Ms Bryce's replacement.

The PM and Opposition Leader Bill Shorten both declined to comment.

The Australian Monarchist League described the GOVERNOR-GENERAL'S COMMENTS as HIGHLY INAPPROPRIATE

The Governor General, Her Excellency the Honourable Quentin Bryce AC CVO, who is the representative of the monarch in the Commonwealth of Australia and who has on many occasions sworn allegiance to the Queen had a sideswipe at the monarchy by improperly commenting that she "hoped one day to see a young Australian boy or girl grow to be the first Australian head of state." It is bizarre that the person who is the effective head of state in this country should so decry her position in this manner.

If Ms Bryce does not accept that she is Australia' effective head of state, why has she been occupying that position for the past five and a half years?

Ms Bryce has sworn as follows:
I, QUENTIN ALICE LOUISE BRYCE, do swear that I will well and truly serve Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth the Second, Her heirs and successors according to law, in the office of Governor-General of the Commonwealth of Australia, and I will do right to all manner of people after the laws and usages of the Commonwealth of Australia, without fear or favour, affection or ill will. SO HELP ME GOD!

This is the first time that a Governor-General has made a statement taken to be supportive of a republic. A Viceroy must, as the Queen does, always shy away from any controversial issue and "do right to all manner of people... without fear or favour, affection or ill will." This means that, as Her Majesty's representative, the Governor-General speaks for all Australians and must never use the high office to pursue his or her personal agenda.

One can only hope that the Prime Minister will take heed of the inappropriate action of this Governor-General in making partisan comments of this nature and will ensure that the person he nominates to be the Queen's next Viceroy will not seek to denigrate our constitutional values in this manner.

Australian Monarchist League.

Her Excellency descends into politics ~ Written by Australians for a Constitutional Monarchy Saturday, 23 November 2013

It is a sad fact that as she approaches the end of her term as Governor-General, Quentin Bryce has blotted her copybook.

It will be said she has damaged the institution. It is too robust for any long term damage. Her Excellency has damaged herself. She is now a divisive figure.

By convention, and one would have thought common-sense, viceroys must be - and must appear to be - above politics. By her descent into the political arena the Governor-General has, in a most spectacular way, breached that admirable rule.

This was not by way of some inadvertent throwaway line to a journalist as she once did when she was returning to Australia. Her intervention, her descent into the political arena, was carefully considered and although subtly worded, was as clear as day.

It was in the course of a Boyer Lecture, an antipodean version of the BBC Reith Lectures. These are, we assume, never given without great preparation.

The inappropriateness of this can be seen by a simple comparison. Can you imagine Queen Elizabeth II even considering giving the Reith Lectures, much less including some political slant?

Contrast Her Majesty's carefully considered Christmas broadcasts and addresses on Commonwealth Day, occasions when The Queen speaks her own mind. They are always interesting but they are never political. After all we have enough politicians to do that ably assisted by a vast commentariat.

If you agree that the Governor General, has overstepped the mark by 'decent into the political arena' then write to her and let her know that she does not serve you in this manner. Send copies of your letter to the Prime Minister and your local Representatives.

World Leadership Alliance Annual Conference

I received an email asking...

Who the hell are these people?

You can follow it up on the link at the end of this article... Just looking at a few names listed and in the pictures is enough to place the PUP Party last along with their leader at the next election... Judging by this list, Professor Palmer is a dangerous man!

THAT IS DANGEROUS TO AUSTRALIA!

Some names and pictures on brochure...William Clinton, Nelson Mandela, Mikhail Gorbachev, Helmut Kohl. Honorary Members - Kofi Annan, Jimmy Carter, Jacques Delors and Aung San Suu Kyi. All leading socialists!

Dame Jenny Shipley... Director Chinese Bank etc.

It looks like a very active SOCIALIST FRONT. Some time spent 'Googling' the names could be very enlightening. You would be foolish to trust these people with your dog!

Jul 5, 2013 - Bob Carter speaking at the launch of Taxing Air: Facts & Fallacies About Climate Change. Basic Physics Doesn't Point to Runaway Global Warming, says Bill Kininmonth: William [Bill] Kininmonth, B.Sc. (UWA), M.Sc. (Colorado State, USA), M.Admin. (Monash), is a consulting climatologist with more than 45 years professional experience. He worked with the Australian Bureau of Meteorology for 38 years in weather forecasting, research and applied studies; for 12 years until 1998 Bill was head of its National Climate Centre. He has worked closely with the World Meteorological Organisation since 1982 as Australia's delegate to the Commission for Climatology, in expert working groups, lecturing at regional training seminars, and later as a consultant. He is author of the book, Climate Change: A Natural Hazard (2004, Multi-Science Publishing Co, UK) and one of the authors of Taxing Air.

"The Precariat" by Guy Standing, Professor of Economic Security at the University of Bath, UK. Price $35.00 + postage.

Guy Standing presents the Precariat — an emerging class, comprising the rapidly growing number of people facing lives of insecurity, moving in and out of jobs that give little meaning to their lives. Guy Standing argues that this class is producing instabilities in society. Although it would be wrong to characterise members of the Precariat as victims, many are frustrated and angry. The Precariat is dangerous because it is internally divided, leading to the villainisation of migrants and other vulnerable groups. Lacking agency, its members may be susceptible to the siren calls of political extremism.

To prevent a 'politics of inferno', Guy Standing argues for a 'politics of paradise', in which redistribution and income security are reconfigured in a new kind of Good Society, and in which the fears and aspirations of the Precariat are made central to a progressive strategy. This important and original book brings out the political dangers, so clear in contemporary America, of failing to address the insecurities of the Precariat. It also suggests the way forward: a reconstruction of the concept of work. - - Eileen Applebaum, Center for Economic and Policy Research, Washington DC, USA

Over 90% of workers in India are informal, poorly paid, without any economic security. Guy Standing combines vision with practicality in outlining policies that are urgently needed to provide security to workers such as these around the world.

Everything that has happened since Reed wrote in 1956 has continued to endorse the correctness of his interpretation of more than 2000 years of troubled history. The Middle East has remained an area of intense political activity and of the maximum falsification of news and suppression of genuine debate, and it was only the few with some knowledge of the role of Talmudic Zionism and Communism who could have had any chance of solving the problem of successive events of major importance, like the so-called Six Day War in 1967 and the massive Israeli invasion of Lebanon in 1982. $27:50 + postage

Dr. McGrath has done us all a great favour by compiling 'a compendium of the voices of others' in "Wolves in Sheep's Clothing'.

The summary of the nature of the people referred to echoes back to Christ's warning to his followers: "Beware of the false prophets, who come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly are ravenous wolves (Matt. 7:15). Dr. McGrath writes: "Communist Fabian wolves (disguised) as sheep (seek) to hide the truth, they would destroy our past as Lenin did in Russia in 1917, unleashing wolves who led to Stalin's murderous regime."

"The Thirteenth Tribe" (ancient Kazars) by Arthur Koestler. Price $21.00 + postage.

wider ramifications. Dr. Bolton enlightens you in this book – now back in stock.
