THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK: A New Initiative: Yesterday the elders (they know who I mean) met to discuss a new initiative by the ALOR. With the development of social media, we are trialling other means (blog.alor.org) to communicate the social credit message. The blog will become the main source of articles feeding into the printed version of ‘OnTarget’, to ensure our loyal supporters who don’t have computers or the internet are kept up-to-date on current events.

The size of OnTarget is also going to be reduced to 4 pages. Some of the feedback we are getting is that some articles are lengthy and difficult to follow. This is to be expected because social credit is about the science of the living community and how we can achieve what we desire. However, this new initiative with social media is about presenting the social credit message to the young. Social media is their medium and we must meet them there.

Our plan is to continue with the printed OnTarget to inform and support our loyal subscriber-base, with a particular focus on up-to-date Australian news dissemination, analysis and the social credit answers.

The printed OnTarget will also continue going into our archives for future reference and study.

NewTimes Survey will continue but also reduced to 4 pages. Its message will concentrate on the successful implementation, and the ongoing struggle trying to implement, policies that could originate from within the social credit philosophy, from around the world.

This new religion of scarcity and climate change (carbon rationing and technocracy) is not embedded in the canon (natural law). It requires ongoing propaganda from all available sources, especially the mainstream media, as the only possible answer, which it is not.

God “has already given” us an abundant world for which we must be good stewards and look after it.

Social Dynamics Training: As part of the League’s ongoing program of personal training and development we recommend the “Social Dynamics Training Course” for all new readers and aspiring actionists.

Instructors will be provided on an as needed basis. Contact Head Office for Instructor details.

In order to overcome this new religion we must first stop believing in it and look to the abundance of God.

Viewing these four training videos will assist in overcoming this unbelief.

TONY BLAIR DELIBERATELY EXAGGERATED THREAT FROM IRAQ, CHILCOT REPORT FINDS by Heather Stewart: <http://www.informationclearinghouse.info/article45042.htm>

...Tony Blair deliberately exaggerated the threat posed by the Iraqi regime as he sought to make the case for military action to MPs and the public in the build-up to the invasion in 2002 and 2003, the Chilcot inquiry has found.

In his forensic account of the way Blair and his ministers built the case for military action, Chilcot finds the then Labour prime minister – who had promised US president George W. Bush, “I will be with you, whatever” – disregarded warnings about the potential consequences of military action and relied too heavily on his own beliefs, rather than the more nuanced judgements of the intelligence services... Chilcot also said: “Mr Blair had been warned that military action would increase the threat from al-Qaida to the UK and to UK interests. He had also been warned that an invasion might lead to Iraq’s weapons and capabilities being transferred into the hands of terrorists.” ***

TWO-PARTY DUOPOLY BECAME TOO CLEVER BY HALF

Jonathon Green, The Drum, 5 July 2016 wrote:

“What happened that would lead to this election result?

Well, maybe politics just got too clever.

If Saturday’s vote and its lingering aftermath show anything, it’s that the political duopoly that has held sway since 1945, is straining at the limits of its use-by date”.

“Things fall apart,” he said. “The centre cannot hold. The anger of Malcolm Turnbull is part of that, the verbal self-immolation of Andrew Bolt is part of that, the lingering talk of Labor leadership ... all part of this sudden flux in Australian politics. The best lack all conviction, while the worst are full of passionate intensity.”

Australia Is Being Swamped By Climate Change Deniers

Fellow Australians. If you are reading me now it means that I have become murderous.

Murderously, apoplectically incensed.

Pauline Hanson appears to have picked up a spot in our Senate at the time of writing, possibly even two or more.

Tony Thomas finds Hanson’s One Nation climate policy “brilliant”. A few choice picks:

- Hold a Royal Commission (or similar) into the corruption of climate science and identify whether any individual or organisation has misled government to effect climate and energy policy.
- Remove all subsidies and financial advantages

WHAT FORMER G.G. BILL HAYDEN ONCE OBSERVED ABOUT PAULINE

Oh dear. Twenty years later, the grinding of teeth and the wringing of hands is on again!

O.T. 20 September 1996: “The grinding of teeth and wringing of hands that has greeted the maiden speech of Pauline Hanson, Independent Member for Oxley, is largely based upon the media’s interpretation of what she said. The League, having obtained a complete transcript of the address to Parliament has no hesitation in welcoming this speech as a constructive contribution to the moribund political debate...

However, many of the media hacks overlook the assessment of the former Governor General, Mr. Bill Hayden, of Pauline Hanson, who now holds his old seat - Oxley. Hayden has clearly spent some time in discussion with Hanson, as he revealed in his article on her in the last edition of The Independent magazine, before it ceased publication. Hayden hailed Hanson as “the little battler who slew the ugly Labor dragon” and commented “God bless her soul, she stands (as I do) by the monarchy. Hayden also noted: “Hanson is mentally

ON TARGET

“Pauline Hanson is part of that. What happened? Well, maybe politics just got too clever. Too clever by half. The professionalised power game turned in on itself and away from the rest of us. For years it has passed needy souls for the nuggets that could bring victory, drilled down for the insecurities, needs and wants it could hang votes on. But it never really crafted a thing that could capture the whole of us, it never sought to treat the full range of human concerns, to fill the emptiness and anxious yearnings with hope and belief...”

offered to the renewable energy industry and make them compete on an even playing field with other energy sources.

- Establish an independent Australian science body replacing the UN IPCC to report on climate science. It will be beyond politicisation and be the basis of Australian policy on insurance and response to weather events.
- Abolish the Renewable Energy Target (RET)
- Cancel all agreements obliging Australia to pay for foreign Climate Action and payment to the United Nations and foreign institutions...
- Remove from the education system the teaching of a one-sided view of climate science. Teaching of climate science will begin in secondary school and will be based on the scientific method of scepticism until proven. ***

tough. She is reading up on her topics well, albeit selectively, as much commentary from her showed when I spoke to her...”

Bill Hayden’s comments on Hanson perhaps tell us as much about the former Governor General as they do about Hanson, particularly the remark about the monarchy. Coming as it does from a man who professed distinct republican tendencies while in the Parliament, this may be a further indication that Hayden has felt the weight of the office of Governor General, and the key role the crown plays in the stability of the nation. If not exactly a fully committed monarchist, Hayden is certainly no rabid republican.

It is clear that Hanson is, as Hayden notes, mentally tough. But she will need all the mental toughness, as well as much electoral support from around the nation as she can find, to keep some kind of sanity under the barrage of abuse directed at her by the politically correct press.” Well, Pauline can now say to those who rubbished her twenty years ago – “I’m back!”

IN 1983 HAYDEN WANTED A POPULATION OF 50 MILLION

The West Australian, 9th August 1983: Hayden wanted a population for Australia of 50 million.

Then West Australian 24th March 1984: “Hayden Rocks Migration Boat”.

But by 1999 Hayden had changed his mind, to some degree. He called for multiculturalism to be killed stone dead. He also said that Australia couldn't handle a large population. Predictably, the professional ethnics opened their multi-coloured mouths and unloaded.

J. McDonald, “Hayden's Immigration View Fires a Multi-Coloured Debate,” The Age, 9th 1999, p.3.

However, like Professor Blainey, Hayden still maintained his multiracialism view.

JUDGE SO-CALLED 'CONSERVATIVES' BY THEIR RECORD

It is not only in Australia that the people are waking up. The following report could have been written about our so-called 'conservatives'.

Judge leadership candidate Theresa May by her record writes the Rev. Peter Mullen in his Monday column.

He writes: I am conservative in my political views, but I hesitate to mention this in case it leads you to think I support the Conservative party. This party does not promote traditional Toryism: like New Labour, they have “modernised” – that is to say, abandoned their historic principles in order to please the metropolitan elite, the politically-correct chattering classes of Hampstead and Islington.

Not for nothing did Cameron describe himself as “the heir of Blair.” So I fully understand why this Conservative party will back the totally useless ‘wet’ (socialist-ed) Theresa May for the Tory leadership.

Last week, Mrs May asked us to “Judge me on my record.” Happily, there is a lot of record on which to judge her, since she is the longest-serving home secretary since 1945. Her tenure was a singular catalogue of errors and incompetence.

Recall 2014 and the chaos caused by the delay in the issue of passports. May claimed this was owing to “a surge in applications,” but it turned out she had been warned the year before that her policy of closing overseas processing offices had resulted in a backlog of 360,000 applications and weeks of delay.

She complained that the Human Rights Act permitted suspected terrorists to continue living in this country under the clause that speaks of their right “to a family life.” She cited the case of one such suspect who was not deported “because he had a pet cat.” Then – trademark May – after so complaining, she did nothing to get the Act amended.

As Home Secretary, she was in charge of the police. She cut their numbers and their budget during a long period in which the terrorist threat was at its highest.

ON TARGET

She sat back and did nothing while in Rotherham, Leicester, Bradford, Rochdale and a dozen other towns and cities the police failed to stop the wholesale rape and sexual abuse of under-age white girls by Muslim men.

She was slow and indecisive in her pathetic attempt to intervene in the infiltration of schools in Birmingham by Islamic extremists. And she allows sharia courts to operate in parallel with British law – and this, in spite of the fact that such courts are complicit in the mistreatment of Muslim women by their menfolk.

The list of her sins, negligences and ignorances, her half-baked and deranged actions and inactions is almost endless. But the most catastrophic of all her many failures was her record on immigration.

As Home Secretary, it was her remit to put into practice Cameron's declared aim of reducing the number of immigrants from over half a million every year to “the tens of thousands.” In fact, during her tenure immigration increased yet further.

But this is the truly laughable bit – were it not so catastrophic for our country: May claimed she was powerless to reduce immigration “because of Shengen, the EU's open borders rule.” And then she voted for Remain! How's that for joined-up thinking?

And yet, prompted by his sinister wife, Michael Gove has entered the leadership contest for the sole purpose of keeping out the most intelligent and able candidate, Boris Johnson. The Tory wets stand by applauding such treachery. These self-serving political pygmies don't care a jot for the future of our country.

Yes, Mrs May, I will do as you ask and judge you on your record. And, in the light of it, I will fear mightily for the greater damage you will wreak when you get the keys to Number Ten.

Now you see, why an old Tory like me, has no time for today's Conservative party. ***

WHO REMEMBERS THE 1988 REFERENDUM?

On Target (6 October 2006) reported: The politicians are hoping most Australians will have forgotten - or the younger generation never knew - that in the 1988 Referendum, along with other proposals, the Hawke government wanted to alter the Commonwealth Constitution to 'recognise' Local Government. Then it was the Liberal's turn to have a go. At the time, Paul Kelly, The Weekend Australian, 14th-15th May 1988 claimed: "The Hawke Government's referendums are modest, simple and lack ulterior motives." Oh! Bless him. Not an unkind thought in his head - and so trusting!

At the time, the League of Rights warned:

"The deliberately misleading wording of the four Referendum proposals, and their "modesty", are a classic example of the Fabian strategy of gradualism. Probably the most dangerous is that which seeks to bring Local Government further under the influence of the Commonwealth government.

Exploiting the problems of Local Government has been a long-term Fabian tactic, developed cleverly by Fabian Socialist Gough Whitlam in his 1972 election campaign. Short sighted and ill-informed Municipal Councillors grasped eagerly at the Fabian bait. All four proposals must be defeated."

Two major tactics to centralise power.

The League produced a flyer for the 1988 campaign opposing the proposals: "In two historic decisions, the 1982 case concerning Racial Discrimination and the 1984 case concerning the Franklin River Dam, a majority of the High Court ruled that because of External Agreements, Canberra could overrule the States and the Constitution..."

Minority High Court Judge Wilson warned us in 1982:

"The effect of investing the Parliament with power through Section 51 (29) (the External Powers) ... would be to transfer to the Commonwealth virtually unlimited power on almost every conceivable aspect of life in Australia, including health and hospitals, the work place, law and order, education and recreational and cultural activity..."

At the time 'GATSwatch' an online website explained: "Rules on the global economy are becoming more intrusive into the lives of people, the fabric of communities and the powers of local government. GATS rules apply to 160 different service sectors - from educational provision to rubbish collection, tourism services to transport policy, health delivery to the setting up of retail stores and water distribution.

GATS: Democracy, Public Services & Government

Regulation: "The latest international trade agreement, the GATS goes far beyond any existing trade agreements in its scope... This agreement has the potential to drastically undermine the decision-making powers of national, regional and local governments..."
