Thought for The Week: A Social Credit Proclamation by M. Oliver Heydorn

The financial system, that is, the banking, cost accounting, and tax systems, can either serve the common good, or else it will serve an oligarchic elite at the expense of the common good. The present system serves, to a greater or lesser degree, an oligarchic elite.

Ever-increasing indebtedness, the rising cost of living, heavy taxation, environmental damage and decay, lack of leisure, poverty and social unrest, physical and psychological ill-health, and incremental totalitarianism are the price we pay for running the financial system as a privately owned, self-serving monopoly.

In order to restore the financial system to its proper place as a humble servant of the genuine interests of the common citizens, it is not necessary to nationalize the banks nor to alter, in substance, the nature of their day-to-day operations.

All that is needed is to prohibit the banks from filling, as they do at present, the economy's underlying price-income gap with additional debt-money and to fill that gap instead with 'debt-free' credit issued directly (in the form of a National Dividend distributed independently of work status) and indirectly (in the form of a National Discount on retail prices) for the benefit of each citizen.

To this end, Social Credit proposes the establishment of a National Credit Office, free from political manipulation, to monitor and regulate a country's financial system in line with what would be a truly common and mutually supportive monetary policy.

THE RISE OF THE MACHINES AND THE FALL OF THE ELITES? by Brian Simpson

Alan Kohler, "The Rise of the Machines and the Next Trump, at <http://www.theaustralian.com.au/business/opinion/alan-kohler/the-rise-of-the-machines-and-the-next-trump/news-story/8c54b44f1e3d792930c67e29604b298e>, gives a predictable response to the Trump phenomenon, but adds a twist. The short of the long is that Clinton may win, because, well, the good guy globalists always win, but beware Trump version 2, because next time the Republicans will find a candidate who has not committed the unforgiveable sin of liking to have sex with women. Well, we will see, it's early days yet and who knows if all this may blow away, or blow into an all-out civil war.

What I find interesting are Kohler's remarks about the rise of robotics and IT. With technological advances robots through advanced-control algorithms, could replace not only drivers, but surgeons and even journalists. There did not appear to be a recognition that Kohler himself could be replaced by a machine in all this. And why not; surely much of the comments that we attack here each week from the mainstream press could be produced by a machine. Maybe it really is. In any case, globalisation will end because robots, no matter where they are located around the world, are simply cheaper than humans. Who needs people anymore?

So, what will people – remember them? – do for a living? One idea is a universal income, suggested by Elon Musk of Tesla, who is working on the driverless cars, which will create massive unemployment. Certainly the corporates won't pay for this, so governments will have to.

Kohler gives no answer because the governments are already struggling with debt, and it is difficult to see how governments could do this under orthodox finance/economics.

Clearly there is no orthodox economic answer to this, so there will either be mass bloodshed or else the time for the social credit economy has arrived and the elites will fall. This will only happen if the common man and woman work together until the pressure is irresistible and the political class yield!

Response from Wallace Klinck - Canada

This is where Donald Trump will come face-to-face with the dilemma. He wants, understandably, to restore and promote jobs and industry for renewed domestic prosperity and security but those jobs previously endangered by foreign competition are increasingly jeopardized by the rising “spectre” of automation and artificial intelligence and he will be forced to seek another solution—as will leaders in all the industrial nations.

The various “Guaranteed Income” schemes although long active have remained moribund primarily because they have relied on tax funding, are therefore simply not financially viable and will become increasingly less so as the base of taxable income earners shrinks.

As Major Douglas predicted nearly a century ago would happen, civilization is now approaching the crossroads where the existing financial system is proving to be incompatible with the labour displacing role of modern technology. It is absolutely essential that we Social Crediters selectively and vigorously approach all organizations, movements and public policy analysts and administrators who are wrestling with this phenomenon and its consequences but until more recent times were restricted from hearing about C H. Douglas’s message. I just received an unexpected message from a new contact in Scotland appealing for information on the A + B Theorem to assist him in delivering a scheduled lecture to the Positive Money people. Things are definitely beginning to “percolate”. It is incumbent upon us Social Crediters to bring them to a “boil”.

Surely, we are approaching a new renaissance for Social Credit!

Douglas’s analysis of the price-system has provided the key to the solution of an otherwise unsolvable problem.

MARXIST SAFE SCHOOLS SOCIAL ENGINEERING TARGETS NEXT GENERATION OF TEACHERS by Mrs Vera West

According to The Australian (<http://www.theaustralian.com.au/news/nation/safe-schools-teaching-gender-diversity-to-sydney-university-students/news-story/f7b6e18a03f242074983a4bb9d32dfc0>) “Gender Training for Uni Students,” teaching students at the University of Sydney have taken part in the sex and gender diversity training of the Safe Schools Coalition. After great controversy, federal government funding has been pulled, so the group wants to beef up supporters as much as possible to its politically correct approach to sex “education” for children. The Liberal Member for Epping in NSW, Damien Tudehope, said that this encroachment on universities is consistent with its “Marxist approach” to social engineering. I would say though that the cultural Marxism found in Safe Schools originated with the universities in the first place and that student teachers have already had their dose of cultural Marxism. ***

JOHN LENNON AND THE BEATLES: MUSICIANS OF THE NEW WORLD ORDER by Bruce Bennett

With Bob Dylan (Zimmerman) getting the Nobel Prize, people have been thinking about the contributions of Beatle, John Lennon, especially what he gave the “new morality.”

A good article deconstructing Lennon from an Alt-Right perspective is by Roosh, “John Lennon’s Imagine Programmed You to Accept the Globalism Nightmare,” Rooshv.com, October 24, 2016. As Roosh points out, this song is the most open in promoting globalism and communism: “Imagine there’s no countries,” “no religion, too”; “Imagine there’s no heaven,” “Imagine no possessions,” “a brotherhood of man.”

In Lennon’s later recordings of the song he sings “and sisterhood of man,” no doubt prompted by his wife Yoko Ono, Hillary Clinton’s mate.

Roosh is right: “While there are many pop songs that are now jarring to my ears because of how “useful” the lyrics are for destroying any notion of traditional society, Imagine takes the cake for the most blatantly socialist song that is still prized for its message, even though its vision was already attempted in the Soviet Union to the tune of tens of millions deaths”.

There is also a good critique of Lennon’s universalism given from a Jewish perspective by Melanie Phillips at The Jerusalem Post, <http://www.jpost.com/Opinion/As-I-See-It-Imagine-John-Lennon-and-the-Jews-415200> :

“John Lennon’s imagined utopia leads straight to the barbarities of Stalin, Mao and Pol Pot.”

We are in agreement; it could not have been put starker. This shows just how wrong, wrong, wrong, this Lennon guy was. Lennon was just an early rock/media/entertainment star promoting globalist nonsense and today the role is played by many others, who are all coming out in support of Queen Hillary. Some of these people are degenerates, which Lennon wasn’t, who delight in doing sexually perverse shocking things, and speaking obscenities by the septic tank load. Yet Hillary joyfully embraces them. It is of course ironic that all of these people are fabulously wealthy, live in mansions, and are usually anti-gun, but have armed body guards. Still, there are Beatles’ songs with excellent titles, but not-so-excellent lyrics.

My suggestion: “Happiness is a Warm Gun,” (White Album, November 22, 1968). Emphasis on “gun.” ***

THE ATTACK ON WHITE PRIVILEGE by Richard Miller

Wendy Bell, a Pittsburgh anchor-woman was fired this year for a Facebook post in which she speculated about the race of gunmen in a crime in a city borough majority black. She thought, and rightly as it turned out, that the criminals were black. Not only was she fired but she was subjected to 1984 – style hate mania and attacked herself because of the colour of her skin, white.

But a black academic can propose that the world would be better off without whites at all, and not only keeps his job, but is well on the way to promotion.

Here in Australia, the attack on “white privilege” is part of the schools and universities.

THE TRIUMPH OF TRUMP - LET THE BATTLE BEGIN!

Most of the “cultural war journalists” for this journal had been busy working on a post-US election special which was to analyse how electoral and political corruption brought Trump down. But to our surprise and delight, a lot of this analysis is now only historically relevant given Trump’s heroic and epic victory, and of course, the triple whammy of Republicans also achieving a majority in both the US House of Representatives and the Senate.

We felt, given the utterly enormous amount of corruption within the American Establishment, that Trump could not get over the line; that it would be close, but the elites would steal the election.

Although we were well aware of the Brexit effect given recent attempts to undermine it, we felt the globalists would not make the same mistake twice. And yet they did.

The opinion polls, with their sham claim of “statistical representation” based on samples of a few thousand, and the smoke and mirrors of shonky mathematics, were wrong! The arrogant chattering class were completely wrong!

US celebrities were in tears. But the award for the most politically correct offended face goes to our own Malcolm Turnbull, who was caught looking at his smart phone just at the moment the news of the Trump win erupted. Lips curled, he looked like a man who had just fallen face first in muck. Enjoy Mr. Globalism!

The lesson in all of this is that there is hope in fighting back against a corrupt rule by the globalist elites. They can be defeated. But the elites are now going to undermine Trump and this victory by bringing about social and economic chaos, if not collapse, in every way that they can.

Australia came out of the last GFC relatively easily, without the scenario of people flung into the streets as in the US, and especially Greece.

My daughter has just done her uni psychology exam where a “cross cultural studies” component is compulsory. Every politically correct piece of bs is taught. I helped her revise by coming up with model answers of white guilt and shame. Only whites are racist; Western civilisation is intrinsically racist; white men, like Don Trump are all racist, sexist, rapists; refugees can do no wrong. This was all dressed up with a reference from an academic and another exam over.

Have a long shower, wash away the dirt and try and forget that the elites have tried to rape your mind.

Then organise against this genocide conspiracy! ***

This time round there is no mining boom, and the property bubble in Sydney/Melbourne, fuelled by the excessive immigration program, is set to burst.

Today the American people have decided to regain control of their country from the elites. They, in effect, have rejected both major party hierarchies and the establishment to go with Donald Trump.

Britain has also voted for BREXIT.

Australia, as a result of the recent federal election, has set this parliament up for significant change for the better.

Bearing in mind that Donald Trump is only one man and will require the support and activism of the electorate to successfully achieve the required changes. He requires those around him to guard and protect him and support those actions that they agree on. It is also the same for Senators Pauline Hanson and Malcolm Roberts.

Archbishop Stephen Langton was only able to achieve Magna Carta with the full support (sanctions) of the Barons, and the endorsement of community, based on historical tradition and law, re-establishing against the wrongs done to the common man.

WHO'S AFRAID OF YOGA PANTS?

I AM! by Mrs Vera West

As the world stands on the nuclear abyss once more, it is good to see that feminists have got their priorities right. After all, who would not be offended by Alan Serrentino's comments complaining about women wearing yoga pants? The Rhode Island man sent a letter to the Barrington Times complaining about "mature" women wearing such a body clinging outfit: "Maybe it's the unforgiving perspective they provide, inappropriate for general consumption, TMI, or the specter of someone coping poorly with their weight or advancing age that makes yoga pants so weird in public."

He was just asking for it.

Predictably enough this was all the prompting feminists needed to go on a protest rampage as women paraded through Sorrentino's neighbourhood dressed in yoga pants and chanting: "We wear what we want!" And of course, there were numerous death threats thrown at Sorrentino for good measure.

The letter to the editor was done as a joke, so it shows the mind set of feminists. Don't protest about say migrant rapes, but instead target an old man who should have been entitled to his opinion without the threat of violence and intimidation, which those who practice the "new morality" excel in.

So, what about older women in yoga pants? Well, sports pants for sports, I say. Fat men with beer guts looking like they are about to burst, or a male pregnancy, I find much more disturbing than the spreading behinds of women. The male beer gut in a navy blue singlet or T-shirt has to be the ultimate in decadence. This fatness arises from pure indulgence, while women's middle age spread is a product of our sedentary life styles. Especially after having a few children it is hard to keep the pounds off. I struggled with weight issues all of my life, especially after the birth of the children.

Thus, why I agree in principle that older women should be able to wear yoga pants casually, probably this form of dress is overdone and especially in hotter weather more traditional dress would be preferable, and better for our health. And, when one gets as old as me and arthritis takes its toll on your knees and hips, one will find it hard to even get the blasted things on! ***

STEALING FROM A CHILD

THE INJUSTICE OF 'MARRIAGE EQUALITY'

David van Gend

Australians are being asked to accept a breathtakingly subversive redefinition of marriage, parenting, family and gender, with consequences for core liberties and our children's education; yet when we raise concerns we are called 'bigots'.
