THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK: Class Warfare is Never the Answer By James Reed:

I admire Andrew Bolt and the great work that he is doing. However this column: <http://www.heraldsun.com.au/blogs/andrew-bolt/labors-society-of-bludgers/news-story/0dbb091e314d4419413ccf785d2a352b>, “Labor’s Society of Bludgers,” seems to be reverting back to old fashioned class warfare. Of course, we know that the plan of the Left is to cause division, tribalism and warfare, in this case it is not identity politics but through its tax policy on high income earners, which they project will pull in $10.8 billion additional taxes over the next four years. This is not new and is part of what socialists do.

Today, many people are struggling to even buy a reasonable quantity of groceries to keep body and soul together. There is no shortage of goods, but people do not have the money to purchase them. This is a dramatic illustration of the “deficiency of purchasing power”. This intuition says that there is something fundamentally wrong with the present cost/price system and that we need to solve this fundamental financial/economic problem.

The challenge for thinkers is to provide clear and concise social credit answers for the flawed financial and economic system. There is no use “running harder” if you are heading in the wrong direction. All new monies come into existence through interest-bearing loans. All companies, (including government) operate with these loans which need to be continuously serviced in order to remain solvent (or balance the budget). This causes an expanding financial-debt treadmill that is impossible to get off. Our indebtedness levels will continue to rise and our local industries will be forever looking to expand their markets, (or expand their tax base) hence the destructive immigration policy (and increased taxes).

Without a full review - (Royal Commission into Banking and Finance-ed) - of the cost/price structure including the national dividend and consumer price subsidy so we are able to purchase what we produce, this issue will never be adequately resolved. So, Andrew, how about a bit of thinking outside of the box!

THE LAST MAN By Brian Simpson

A great existential survival article has appeared at the otherwise brief news service Breitbart.com: <http://www.breitbart.com/london/2017/07/30/malloch-europa-aurabia-last-man/> by Ted Malloch, “Europa, Aurabia and the Last Man,” July 30, 2017. The reference to the “last man,” is to the description given by the philosopher Friedrich Nietzsche (1844-1900) in Thus Spoke Zarathustra, to depict world-weary men, concerned only for their personal comfort and security, who are incapable of defence, and thus are called opportunistic pacifists. Nietzsche saw the West as heading towards the mass production of such “last men,” which would ultimately spell the doom of their societies when faced with an external threat.

The last man is radically distinct from the “over-man” who seeks to transcend the existing limits of the human condition, and build himself anew. Not so the last man, who is a coward and a slob: <http://www.apotheosismagazine.com/home/2016/10/7/what-is-the-last-man-nietzsche>. Today, we cultural critics would call them “sheeples,” the mindless mass of “zombies” (as Mike Adams at natural News.com, calls them), who let it all happen, or worse, simply support the system solely to reap rewards. The universities are full of these orcs and under-men.

Back to the Malloch article. He notes that the vast flood of people from the Third world to the West, both Europe and the United States (but Australia and the rest of the West should be included) constitutes a great “death wish”:

“The U.S. estimates it is now populated by millions of illegal and undocumented immigrants. In fact, about one-fourth of the 42.4 million foreign-born people living in the United States today are illegal immigrants – this amounts to roughly 10.5 million, according to an objective study by the Center for Immigration Studies. Geostrategists cannot comprehend billions (yes, potentially billions) of people moving from South to North. They can’t comprehend the risk or the total effects of this — a world without borders. Yet it is something that globalist political leaders and flat worlders actually seek and actively endorse.

Europe will change. This will happen... is happening, in our lifetimes, with globalist elites endorsing it as benign or even laudatory. The ‘anywhere’ crowd with no attachment to place, custom or religion, favor such open borders.

The ‘somewhere’ folks who still have some degree of loyalty to national identity, tradition and religion do not share the same attitude. As the global elites get their way we witness the end of Europe and the emergence of the Last man.”

The last man is incapable of rising to the challenge posed by mass migration, among other threats; as the conservative philosopher Roger Scruton has said, “Put simply, the citizens of Western states have lost their appetite for foreign wars; they have lost the hope of scoring any but temporary victories; and they have lost confidence in their way of life. Indeed, they are no longer sure what that way of life requires of them.”

<http://azure.org.il/include/print.php?id=485>

Thus, they are set to lose this way of life, which is fast happening now, according to Malloch:

“If present trends continue, and every evidence — from Merkel to Macron, from Sweden to Canada suggests it will (Trump excluded) — the migrants will not abate. They will continue to come (mostly single males of young adult status) en masse to open and willing arms.

Make no mistake this is nothing less than the utter and complete transformation of Europe into Eurabia, a cultural and political appendage of the Arab and Afro/Muslim world. This Eurabia is fundamentally anti-Christian, anti-Western, anti-American, and anti-Semitic.”

Ironically, those who should be opposing this, support it, because of their own ideological agenda, thinking that the forces unleashed will wipe out their enemies, but not them, like two sumo wrestlers in a contest to see who survives from eating slices of poisonous fugu fish:

<http://www.nytimes.com/1981/11/29/travel/one-man-s-fugu-is-another-s-poison.html>

It is a delusional belief, indicating that the elites because of their hubris, and psychopathology, have not thought through the consequences of their grand experiment, or factored in Murphy’s Law. ***

A RIPPER ANTI-IMMIGRATION ARTICLE By James Reed

A recent article has noted that about sixty percent of US respondents in two surveys want to stop all legal and illegal immigration. The polls, which gave people the freedom to voice their real thoughts, surprisingly showed that white American college graduates are more, not less, opposed to immigration than the average American.

Almost three-of-four white liberals hide their preference for zero net immigration, and they are more likely than moderates and conservatives in doing this. In fact, 71 percent of liberals support immigration restriction. That is good, but it will do nothing unless these people take action, and they are unlikely to do so, because it would threaten their jobs and creature comforts.

Now to Australia.

An article in Quadrant, July 26, 2017, E. R. Drabik, “The Great Immigration Non-Debate,” <https://quadrant.org.au/opinion/qed/2017/07/great-immigration-non-debate/>, points out that Australia is going in the opposite direction of much of the West, which has questioned continual mass migration, at least to some degree. Australia is accelerating its immigration like there is no tomorrow, and there probably won’t be at this rate:

“The numbers coming in are, quite frankly, insane. Over the last 12 years, annual average net immigration has tripled from its long-term historical average, to 210,000 people a year. Australia is importing a population equivalent to Hobart each and every year or an Adelaide every six years, with this turbocharged intake expected to continue for decades. By way of comparison, Australia’s annual immigration inflow is roughly equal to that of Britain’s, despite Australia only having around a third of the population.

While the populations of most other developed countries have either stabilised or declined, Australia’s population surged by a staggering 21.5% between 2003 and 2015 on the back of Canberra’s immigration-on-roids policy.

If current trends continue unabated, Australia’s population is projected to nearly double by 2050, to over 40 million. Needless to say, this immigration-fuelled population explosion will have a host of far-reaching social, cultural, demographic, economic and environmental consequences. But practically no effort has been expended by governments considering what Australia will look like in 10, 20, 40 or 80 years under this high immigration scenario. (continued on next page)

(continued from previous page) Canberra is rushing at breakneck speed while blindfolded towards a big, ultra-diverse Australia. In the long history of human folly, this must certainly be a stand-out.

Nor has the Turnbull government provided an official rationale as to why it is running the largest per capita immigration programme in the world. The entire sum of its immigration policy appears to be to bring in as many people as quickly as possible while assiduously burying any sort of public discussion on the issue. The government didn't even mention the 2017-18 permanent intake number in the budget papers. Immigration Minister Peter Dutton made no public statement on the matter. Dutton's position atop a new super ministry, ostensibly to enhance national security, has been pilloried by pundits on both sides of politics as ministerial overreach. Yet, at the same time it has been reported that Dutton is considering outsourcing vast swaths of Australia's immigration system to the private sector, effectively surrendering control over our borders. Rorters, dodgy middlemen and fifth columnists will be rubbing their hands in anticipation."

The article goes on to knock over the shonky economic arguments for mass immigration, as well as the ageing population one:

"As a small but growing number of commentators has quite rightly argued, large-scale immigration is being used to artificially pump up economic growth figures at the expense of the existing Australian population. While mass immigration may juice headline GDP growth numbers, the average Australian is no better off economically in per capita terms, as various studies have confirmed. And when one takes into account the greater congestion, higher housing costs, lower wages, intensified job competition, loss of amenity, and overburdened infrastructure and services linked to the present influx, there is a compelling case that wide-open immigration is degrading the living standards of existing citizens.

Those peddling the myth that high immigration is good for all of us tend to be driven by either vested commercial interests or open-borders ideology. Australia's GDP per capita growth rates over the last decade or so have been weak when compared to a number of developed nations that have little to no immigration. Under current policy settings, Australia is experiencing largely prosperity-free growth. Economist Judith Sloan recently observed:

"Successive Australian governments have been keen to boost population growth through excessive immigration intakes and have been able to disguise two recessions by not measuring changes in GDP per capita."

Despite the mounting problems associated with the current policy, the major parties remain silently locked in bi-partisan embrace of mass immigration. As Mark Latham has written, both the Liberal-National Coalition and Labor have "caved in to pro-immigration groups, property developers, big retailers and foolhardy Treasury officials who use planeloads of new arrivals to artificially inflate Australia's GDP numbers." The influence of this powerful growth lobby over government policy has previously been chronicled by sociologist Katharine Betts."

All good stuff, but for someone as old as me, I have heard it all before. Our country really is controlled by crony capitalism, and the corruption of this country is approaching South American standards. I find this all frustrating having been opposing this dispossession since the 1970s, without seeing any hope of victory; on the contrary, Australia has begun to rot, and we opposing this have become like Shakespearean vapours. ***

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Tony Abbott effectively nails the republican issue on the head ('Imagine Bill our Head of Fate', 2/8) by reminding us that the Crown gives us 'national continuity and a focus of loyalty that's above politics'. Something enormously valuable that has been bequeathed to Australia by the British people's 1100 year-old constitutional history will be lost if the republican campaign is successful. Abbott could have added that a constitutional monarchy, based on sacred tradition, is by far the best protection of a people against tyranny, whether that is based on inadequate ideology pushed by 'green-left' witchdoctors, lust for power in unbalanced persons or financial greed of cliques of merchants. SWALLOWED BY THE DRAGON By James Reed

Ron Asher, In his new updated edition of “In The Jaws of the Dragon: How China is Taking Over New Zealand and Australia”, ($40 posted from Tross Publishing.co.nz, 2017), is well recommended for all concerned about China’s aggressive buy ups of lands across the world, but that is not what I want to focus on here.

The bulk of the book performs the valuable task of locating China as a military threat to the free world. Trump, at the time of writing has blamed China for the North Korean missile tests, basically because China could have stopped them, but China has most likely given nuclear technical aid to North Korea to advance its nuclear program. Even the mainstream papers, which generally fall all over China, are beginning to publish articles expressing some concern about China’s military might: The Australian, August 1, 2017, p. 11.

The core argument made by Asher, is that nationals should be concerned about Chinese foreign investment because of national security issues.

China is a communist authoritarian country, and is continuous with the China that butchered millions of its own people under Mao. It is a country seeking world domination, Asher shows, and Australia and New Zealand are just bite-size snacks in the scheme of things. Our resources are considered to be China’s resources.

TARGET FOR THE WEEK

Another terrorist plan thwarted due to our skilled Security forces who discovered the plan to detonate a bomb aboard a passenger aeroplane. Four men have been arrested in the Sydney area and early reports suggest the plot has an Islamic background.

Actionists should use the opportunity, while so topical, to send their MP’s and Senators, the double sided page from the “Stop Terrorism – Stop Immigration” campaign in the recent printed On Target.

China, Asher shows, is a non-liberal authoritarian regime that has severe restrictions on freedom of speech, association and religion, holding millions of people in labour camps for thought crimes. Meanwhile “craven and callous Western leaders wine and dine with China’s Politburo.” The genocide of Tibet, seldom mentioned by the mainstream press should make any reasonable person concerned about this regime. It is insane that our chattering class, who attack ordinary folk over “racism,” are silent about China’s human rights abuses, because of political correctness, and money.

Yet, being a non-white communist country, China is beloved by the Left who while seeing every minute wrong with Whites, can see no evil there, such is the level of the Left’s White Pathology.

Asher, though, does not see China as becoming No. 1 economically, as China is set to crash by 2020, due to inherent defects in trying to run a capitalist economy along communist lines, with many state run corporations now bankrupt, but kept in the black by fraudulent accounting.

The solution for Australians and New Zealand: “It is time for Australians and New Zealanders to shake themselves out of their apathy and get to grips with the issue which is this: do we wish to be true to its foundation and heritage, and retain its democracy and sovereign independence, or become a majority subsidiary of China Inc., the business arm of the world’s most oppressive dictatorship?” (p.332)

Which way, Western man?
