THOUGHT OF THE WEEK: Gustave Le Bon served as a great inspiration to the nephew of Sigmund Freud, Edward Bernays, as did Wilfred Trotter who wrote the book: Instincts of the Herd in Peace and War. We can see from the previous description... that these prominent characters knew each other directly and were indeed in lengthy conversations regarding psychoanalysis and herd mentality. We can only imagine the types of conversation that were had between these men; conversations which would ultimately help create and shape the methods of the Tavistock Institute, and thus the world.

HOW LETHAL IS COVID-19 REALLY? Why massive 'fatality' rates from Italy are MISLEADING !

25 Mar, 2020 19:44 / By Peter Andrews: Irish science journalist and writer, based in London. He has a background in the life sciences, and graduated from the University of Glasgow with a degree in genetics.

In Italy, the proportion of infected people dying from the novel coronavirus — 10 percent according to the latest figures — seems through the roof. Unsurprisingly, there is more to this terrifying figure than meets the eye. You do not need to be an expert to calculate the mortality rate. It is one number divided by another — the number of people who have died from the virus divided by the total number of confirmed cases. In the case of Italy, 7,503 dead divided by 74,386 infected gives a mortality rate of roughly 10 percent. But that does not mean that one in ten people who contract the virus will die, despite what the scaremongering media would have you believe. The first reason why is that the first, smaller number — the number of deaths from Covid-19 — is impossible to underestimate. People are either alive or dead, and usually as soon as a person dies they will quickly find their way into the national statistics. But the larger number, the confirmed cases, must by definition be an underestimate. It would be impossible for every person in a country positive for the coronavirus to have been already tested and added to the confirmed cases. The virus can be dormant in people for up to two weeks, and young people can experience very mild or even no symptoms at all, and still be positive for the virus. Since that figure is by definition too low, the mortality rates being reported are by definition too high.

Failing to test

Another factor is that governments are being pushed well beyond their capabilities for mass testing and contact tracing, some more than others. With typical efficiency, Germany is on top of their testing situation, and as such have picked up many milder cases. Therefore they have a high number of confirmed cases relative to the true number of infected people in Germany. This is keeping the mortality rate in Germany down at 0.5 percent, baffling experts who are expecting apocalyptic scenes at the hospitals, the likes of which have so far only materialized in Italy. Perhaps the cases will soon mount up in Germany, and their mortality rate will climb toward the four or five percent that seems to be the European average. But due to the asymptomatic people (a majority according to the best research) even that is an exaggeratedly high rate. Apply this principle to Italy, whose civil protection chief Angelo Borrelli told La Repubblica newspaper on Monday that: “It is credible to estimate that there are 10 positive cases for every one officially reported.” If this were true, and as many as 640,000 people are infected in Italy, their actual mortality rate would in a stroke become one percent instead of ten percent. The scale of the problem begins to look quite different in that context.

Cause of death

Yet another reason for Italy's inflated mortality rate is how deaths are being recorded there. Professor Walter Ricciardi, an adviser to the Italian minister of health, told the Telegraph on Monday that “the way in which we code deaths in our country is very generous in the sense that all the people who die in hospitals with the coronavirus are deemed to be dying of the coronavirus.”

A thought experiment may elucidate this. Imagine that one thousand people, all over the age of 75, died in hospitals in northern Italy last week. All of them had tested positive for the coronavirus at some point during the past few weeks. The vast majority of Covid-19 fatalities, 99 percent according to Italian research, have had a pre-morbidity, if not two or three. These are underlying health issues, like heart disease, cancer or various infections. Some might have been comatose, with life support machines and artificial breathing the only thing keeping them alive anyway. Eventually, their bodies gave out, and they simply could not fight on any longer. But does that mean that in the absence of the coronavirus, those one thousand people would still be alive? In other words, is it really true to say that all of these people died of Covid-19? But amidst this crisis, when health systems and governments have tunnel vision for this one ailment, all one thousand are chalked off as victims of the plague.

More spanners in the works

A recent article in the Guardian wrestling with Germany's apparently too-low mortality rate concludes that because they are not conducting widespread testing of dead bodies for the coronavirus people could be dropping dead inside their own homes of Covid-19 and going unrecorded. This seems unlikely to be much of a factor, but there may be other reasons why Italy has so far been an outlier in coronavirus casualties.

Many have pointed to Italy's elderly population as the catch-all reason for their unnaturally high death rates. But that idea is a non-starter. Germany has the next oldest population in Europe, and Germans are not as healthy as Italians (who live long lives precisely because they are healthy), and yet Germany has the lowest death rate of the ten worst affected countries. Age cannot explain away the disparity.

Another factor is doubtless the unpreparedness of Italy's health system, and the dearth of beds and equipment that is now spawning rumors about doctors being forced to jettison some patients to make room for others. Germany is better equipped, but may not have been put to the test yet, as the virus is yet to explode there as it has in northern Italy.

Crisis around the corner?

Experts are still saying that the reason for all of these disparities is simply that some countries are further along the epidemic curve than others. This could explain why so many more have died in China and Italy and so few in Germany and the UK, for example, but it cannot explain the wild fluctuations in the mortality rates.

None of this is meant to take away from the severity of the crisis in Italy, or that which may be just around the corner for the rest of the world. But the key point to take away from this is that the 10 percent mortality rate being reported from Italy is grossly misleading. It is being waved around by the mainstream media as a bit of old-fashioned sensationalism at best, and a calculated tool of propaganda at worst.

A figure like 0.3 percent barely higher than the common flu, simply does not have the same power in getting people to swallow unprecedented legislation that gives the state tremendous new powers in a host of new areas ... all in the name of public health of course.

FROM MY DESK by Arnis Luks

In an increasing time of uncertainty, it is hard to know where to start as the events unfold. Media reports are hugely sensationalised, and government scientists appear to be used for political, rather than scientific purposes. Enormous new powers have been handed to the "Technocracy". Government has chosen to shut down Parliament for an extended period placing all at the propaganda mercy of the enemy.

In his booklet: THE FATE OF EMPIRES and SEARCH FOR SURVIVAL, Sir John Glubb highlights the progression of empires (and nations) in decline. Again, the very opposite of what should or 'could be' as presented by the Chivalry of the Christian Knight.

Faith without works is death

The incarnation as a physical and spiritual fact. When I decided (F) to incarnate my faith (S) in a certain gardening method, it (my faith) is impossible to realise unless I put it into practice

(incarnate). I believed that placing mulch on the surface of the soil would promote humous development and reduce watering requirements. Trying it on the garden (dog) proved my faith (HS). Until I put my faith into works it was simply an abstraction - a thought. No different from any other thought or religion not put into practice. The power of the thought was realised by Chivalry: The Christian Knight has hold of the belief that he must train and bring into subjection his body - for the protection of the weak and advancement of all Righteous causes and the subduing of the Earth which God has given to the children of men. Mere fighting skill is not sufficient; the chivalrous knight must be fighting for those causes that support God's reign of charity (love).

putting it into practice. The Sermon on the Mount (Matt:5-7) is rich with thoughts waiting for the opportunity to be put into practice.

Faithful Dealings (Douglas social credit) can only exist if it is put into practice. Right now our government is disassembling our ancient freedoms because of a thought, escalated by the propaganda department of the new world order, that some sort of scenario rivaling the 1918 flu is occurring. It is an out working of their philosophy to power. The propaganda-wing of the NWO - MS media - have heightened the state of frenzy to such a degree that cowardly politicians are yielding our nation to 'government by technocrats' (scientists).

That the MSM can exaggerate the extent of the virus, almost out of thin air, and frenzy the entire population of the western world - similar to a person calling out fire, fire, fire in a crowded cinema - and for the government to respond without question and impose even further draconian measures, is an indication the media is way too powerful and irresponsible for their own political purposes. What should now occur is a drastic curtailment of the media monopoly to the point where cities run their own media independently of these moguls - regionally researched, printed, radio-broadcast and TV, locally run.

There has been no agreement by the people of Australia for this drive to world government, unlike 120 years ago when "We The People" did agree to form a nation under 'these' conditions (the constitution).

Today I learnt of the precarious position so many families are finding themselves in with significant financial liabilities and no immediate prospects to process these difficulties. Literally millions of people in Australia are immediately destitute because of this deliberately propagated virus-fear. Going to the bureaucracy as the source for basic life support, instead of self-reliance, the earth, and faith, places all in a position of bondage and subjection to a sovietised government department. I am also suspicious of the open display of homelessness

HEADLINES AND COMMENTS OF INTEREST

Comment to Michael Smith news. While we are occupied venting our wrath against the exploitation of our nation by other people, we are being blinded and can't put events into a wider picture. We have not noticed that this country is being Sovietised!

A case in point is the recent dismissal of nurses in a private hospital as 'the government' commandeers it for the future 'corona virus' victims - which sensationalised numbers may or may not eventuate.

In the meantime our economy has been dismantled, and, as I have read, at least an extra million Australians will be without employment - and pay. If the government's plans are what I suspect, these workers will be paid a 'universal basic income' (UBI for short) thus making these people government employees - with all the draconian red tape, rules and regulations that bureaucrats are so fond of - again a sovietising move by our 'conservative' government.

While the Russian folk had the Soviet system forced on them through violent Revolution, the Western World is being Sovietised through a Psychological Revolution - and the main psychological tool used so skillfully by the mainstream media is Fear! -- Betty Luks ***

Former UK PM Gordon Brown calls for global government to tackle coronavirus: <https://www.theguardian.com/politics/2020/mar/26/gordon-brown-calls-for-global-government-to-tackle-coronavirus>

(without adequate response at any level of government - state or local) as a subliminal-threat to all who will not toe the politically-correct line (chinese social credit). "I am from the government and I am here to help", has now become: "I am from the government and you will cower before me or you shall not eat".

We are witnessing the collapse of the American Empire, and our own nation Australia. This chaos will continue until we become so desperate we will consider the New World Order (world government) as the only viable option. Even if it takes another world war.

What will surface after this event, now rests entirely at the feet of individuals like you and me by what we now do. Are we a knight, or shall we cower to the NWO? ***

Hospital turns to high-dose vitamin C to fight coronavirus - 26-Mar-2020 By Will Chu

A hospital has reportedly turned to vitamin C as a treatment for the coronavirus, after reports emerged from China that doses well in excess of daily Dietary Reference Values (DRV) showed promise. <https://www.nutraingredients.com/Article/2020/03/25/Hospital-turns-to-high-dose-vitamin-C-to-fight-coronavirus>

No evidence to support intravenous high-dose vitamin C in the management of COVID-19

The Therapeutic Goods Administration is aware of a report that intravenous high-dose vitamin C may be beneficial in the management of a COVID-19 infection. We have investigated this report and found there is no robust scientific evidence to support the usage of this vitamin in the management of COVID-19. <https://www.tga.gov.au/alert/no-evidence-support-intravenous-high-dose-vitamin-c-management-covid-19>

UNCLE LEN'S GREAT CORONAPOCALYPSE ADVENTURES

By Uncle Len, Man of the Plague

Well, there you go, all those people doing bootcamp, if they break the social distancing rules, well the police are going to swat you, and rightly so. But, why should there be bootcamps at all, forms of exercise torture? If gyms can be shut down because some big guy can be shedding viruses like cats shed fur, all over the place, then shut them down too. And what is it, 10 people max at a funeral, and 5 for weddings? Where did they pull these numbers from? Surely these are high risk places, since wedding involve people getting pretty close together, and funerals, well someone is dead anyway, which is hardly a good start. So, shut them down too!

<https://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-8149837/Bootcamp-trainers-face-5000-fines-clients-1000-ignore-social-distancing-rules.html?ito=push-notification&ci=11304&si=1326534>

Yes, this is truly a fantastic time for your resident shed-dwelling hobo writer, who has suffered from social coronavirus all of his life. Social distancing is what I have lived with as people avoid me like the ... plague! And soon everyone is going to be like Uncle Len because stage three social distancing is coming soon:

<https://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-8149263/What-level-three-restrictions-involve.html?ito=push-notification&ci=11306&si=1326534>

“From midnight Australia will enter 'stage two' of restrictions to slow the spread of coronavirus.

Businesses including massage parlours and nail salons will be closed and weddings will be limited to five people.

But even before those measures come in, officials will discuss what the next level of restrictions will be.

The national cabinet will tonight debate 'stage three' restrictions after Victorian Premier Daniel Andrews warned this morning: 'Stage three is coming'.

Nobody knows exactly what the next stage will entail - but experts have told Daily Mail Australia that more extreme social distancing measures are inevitable.

'Distancing can be more extreme and restrictions can be made tougher. Watch this space,' said Stephen Leeder, a Professor of Public Health at Sydney University.”

Wow, just imagine closing down shopping centres. I know that the article dismisses this, but in the introduction to the article it reads “the closure of schools and shopping centres.” If this does happen, will the coronavirus plague be solved by everybody starving to death? No, the elites have plenty of everything, but could experience a shortage of smoked salmon some years down the post-apocalyptic track.

No, diversity, like Superman, will not save us!

DEPRESSIONARY ECONOMIC CRASH

By James Reed

The Great Depression 2.0 is a coming, and we all need to move to level three of preparation, that is for the economic crash:

<https://www.project-syndicate.org/commentary/coronavirus-greater-great-depression-by-nouriel-roubini-2020-03>

...The shock to the global economy from COVID-19 has been both faster and more severe than the 2008 global financial crisis (GFC) and even the Great Depression. In those two previous episodes, stock markets collapsed by 50% or more, credit markets froze up, massive bankruptcies followed, unemployment rates soared above 10%, and GDP contracted at an annualized rate of 10% or more. But all of this took around three years to play out. In the current crisis, similarly dire macroeconomic and financial outcomes have materialized in three weeks.

...Unfortunately for the best-case scenario, the public-health response in advanced economies has fallen far short of what is needed to contain the pandemic, and the fiscal-policy package currently being debated is neither large nor rapid enough to create the conditions for a timely recovery. As such, the risk of a new Great Depression, worse than the original – a Greater Depression – is rising by the day.

...The short of the long is that the global economy is already well on the road to the Great Depression 2.0. Whether this is part of a grand plan or not does not matter now, for what counts will be surviving this and opposing the Newer New World Order that will be imposed upon us. After all, they are restricting personal liberties, and that has probably never been done to this degree in human history. Where did the power to dictate all of this come from? Why no opposition to anything the system wants? Where will this go if the pandemic continues for 12 months? What will be left?
