Thought For The Week: A 'Problem' correctly stated is already half solved - CH Douglas

"...It is represented as drudgery for a woman to look after her own children; but an honoured career for her to be paid to look after another woman's children, provided it be outside the home in crèches or nursery schools or kindergarten. Housework, it is averred, deadens mind and soul by its monotony, but being paid to type matter, that has small or no interest to the woman, the live long day, or to perform some near mechanical repetitious task in a factory or workshop is declared to emancipate a female. Any paid work outside the home is, in the eyes of the 'anti-woman feminist', preferable to the labour performed for love of home and husband and children or even of fellow men."

Mrs. Dorah Watts, in Chattels of the Modern World

THE BARBARIANS WITHIN THE GATES by Eric D. Butler OnTarget 21 April 1995

During the past Easter Season (1995-ed) we have seen earnest and well-meaning Christians seeking in various ways, including street walks and open air services, to attempt to bear witness to their Christian Faith against what is often described as “the gross Materialisms” now dominating so much of man’s life. The reality is, of course, that what could once be described as a Western Christian Civilisation, with its roots deep in the Greco-Roman Civilisation, now lies in almost complete ruins.

A feature of every dying Civilisation is that the great majority do not even know that it is dying. How can we expect the products of a secular humanist training system, misnamed as an education system, to understand that a Christian Civilisation is dying when they know little or nothing about that Civilisation, or how it grew out of a revelation which over time completely transformed man’s relationship to government, to art, to every aspect of man’s activities.

What was once described as a “liberal education”, a term generally used before the First World War, was designed to produce what was called a “Christian gentleman”, one with a broad knowledge of history, philosophy and the arts. Modern education is increasingly designed to produce what might be described as “technical barbarians” who can be slotted in to some narrow specialist activity in what is euphemistically described as “the work force”.

The policy of “full employment” rather than self-employment is used to drive mothers from the home and to deny them their most creative role, the nurturing of the future generations of the nation. The basic tragedy of the situation is that the well-meaning, appalled by the growing violence, the sheer vulgarity of events such as the recent display of Her Majesty the Queen and Prince Phillip as nudes on a Canberra park bench, or a New York publication depicting a business-suited Easter Bunny crucified on a taxation form, fail to attempt to come to grips with the basic evil threatening Civilisation.

The author of Social Credit, C.H. Douglas, related the comment of one Christian theologian, who said that many of the better publicised sins of man were but like pimples on the skin compared with ultimate sin: the robbing of the individual of his most divine attribute, creative initiative, by the use of centralised power, thus driving him down the scale of life.

The philosophy under-girding the modern mass production system, imposed by a financial system, which generates increasing debt, is blatantly anti-Christian with its insistence that the individual exists to serve the system. Christ insisted that ‘the Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath’. It is true that a spiritual revival is urgently called for, but such a revival can only take place when the individual is genuinely free and secure. Christ, the Son of God, claimed that He had come that man might enjoy the life more abundant. He taught that man should pray that God’s will be done on earth as it was in heaven, and that God the Father should make available the bread, the physical basis of life.

One of the central features of the Christian revelation is the stress on the importance of love. The practical application of the doctrine of love produces a specific Christian culture. But how in today's world can such a culture be sustained when every child is taught that the main aim in life is to be highly successful in competitive living, that his value can only be measured in his survival value in the struggle for power.

Christopher Skase (the Australian who was pursued internationally after his business empire financially collapsed-ed) is of no more value than a humble tradesman building a house. A sick society does need ambulance workers, but well-meaning and basically decent people can exhaust themselves in never ending ambulance demands unless they devote some of their energies towards grappling with that evil which produced the Crucifixion.

RECLAIMING THE SHIRE By Arnis Luks

This week I was sent this important link about an "Independent Undertaker John O'Looney Exposes the Covid-19 'pandemic'"

<https://www.ukcolumn.org/video/independent-undertaker-john-olooney-exposes-the-covid-19-pandemic>

It is quite concerning when official news services withhold important information of this calibre; that death rates from the jab are unprecedented. That mRNA jab carnage is occurring, and news services suppress this vital information. Building this narrative of censorship further, the following two headlines substantiate the thesis that the mRNA jab is killing untold numbers:

mRNA COVID Vaccines Dramatically Increase Endothelial Inflammatory Markers and ACS Risk as Measured by the PULS Cardiac Test: a Warning
<https://www.ahajournals.org/doi/abs/10.1161/CIR.0000000000001051>
Vaccine risk? Blood markers suggest an increased risk of heart attacks

<https://joannenova.com.au/2021/11/vaccine-risk-blood-markers-suggest-an-increase-risk-of-heart-attacks/>

Then finally the following headlines:

Omicron variant 'very worrying', reaches Europe
WHO declares new Covid strain a variant of concern, now detected in Europe, as scientists reveal its 'horrific spike profile'.

Concern new Covid-19 variant is in NSW
Urgent genomic testing is underway after passengers who arrived in Sydney from southern Africa overnight tested positive.

Urgent testing after African arrivals test positive to COVID-19

Fourteen of the passengers of the flight from Doha, which arrived in Sydney on Saturday night, are from the nine southern African countries affected by the new Omicron strain.

Christian Civilisation is being crucified by the policies of the Anti-Christ. The resurrection of that Civilisation requires that professing Christians carefully heed the warning that Faith without works is Death. The modern barbarians have long since breached the walls protecting Civilisation; they are now firmly established inside the gates, often invited in by those who should have inspired campaigns of resistance to keep them out.

It was during the first modern revolt against a Christian State, the French Revolution, that the term, "The treachery of the clerics" became widely known. It was the treachery of Judas, which preceded the Crucifixion. The resurrection of Christian Civilisation can only take place by facing the reality outlined by the great Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn, that there is spiritual wickedness in high places, and that it is futile to look for effective Christian leadership from those who have established themselves in those high places. ***

Closer to the truth

The floodgates of news information have finally been breached to show how dangerous the mRNA jab is and the MSM counter-news has gone into overdrive to suppress the truth with another false narrative of the Omicron variant being 'the prepared culprit' of this increased carnage. The mRNA jab is the origin and cause of this death carnage. The MSM is trying to contain the information breakout from the official narrative of covid and lockstep/lockdowns. Dan Andrews is on the cusp of becoming Australia's first 'legislated' totalitarian leader. Will the Victorian politicians allow this to occur? Can we trust politicians to be left to their own devices and temptations? Are there any good men or women left?

Where The Rubber Hits The Road

In order to hold some hope towards regaining the political initiative from our (would be) totalitarian masters, it's necessary to consider how things worked or could have worked best considering 'their circumstances' from the past, to consider the present where our heritage, our spiritual and cultural reserves find expression, and finally the future to set forth a policy objective that is realistic considering our own resources and the mounted forces against us. While the Westminster system of parliamentary government is in tatters, similar to the political times of Magna Carta, the institution of government warrants preservation while the tyranny is brought to order. What methods can be brought to bear to achieve a realistic policy of limited constitutional government within an active and vibrant democracy of rule of, for and by the people?

The first would be to visualise what it is that you wish to achieve? And the next would be to uncover and execute methods to achieve that limited objective. Consider in retrospect, the GMO decree in SA by state

Primary Industries Minister David Basham who's farming electorate of Finnis was one of the most adversely effected electorates against their existing 37% organic status.

GMO Free Status Lost By Decree - 11 councils failed to demonstrate - 37% are certified organic in some regions.

OnTarget Vol 56 No 44 13th November 2020

<https://www.abc.net.au/news/2014-05-29/greens-unhappy-with-gm-decision-affecting-organic-farmer/5485796>

In 2010, the state government of Western Australia lifted the ban on GM canola, allowing for the commercial cultivation of this GM crop for the first time. As a result some farmers, including Steve Marsh's next door neighbour began growing GM canola. Subsequently 70% of Steve Marsh's farm was GMO contaminated and he lost his organic certification resulting in those premium sale-price-losses plus additional court costs against him of $804,000 in his attempt to gain compensation for the original GMO contamination.

Representative Government

What does this mean and what does it entail? The voter hopes to achieve some form of effective representation in the parliament by electing a representative. That person's primary duty once elected then becomes to represent the will of that electorate in the parliament to the best of their ability. This 'will' of the electorate may not always be clear cut, improve things, good, or correct, but that is the road prepared to be travelled by aspiring candidates.

All good in theory, but in reality, political parties, lobbyists and pressure groups have all undermined this electoral perspective to the point that policy is derived from the highest bidder (of donations or whatever) to these political crime gangs. Visualising representative government and actual practical results on the ground are two entirely different perspectives. Representative government as a political expression of voter-power must come back towards the people if it is to be again realized as an effective political mechanism for representation.

In Retrospect

A suitable retrospective response could have been to regularly provide your representative with your 'written will' to ensure they are reliably informed. Another could have been to hold regular public meetings for which the representative is invited, to be held to account for their current and past performance and the electorate reliably informed of prospective legislation and 'intended' voting.

This Representative, not delegate, is a two-way street. The public meeting must be held for sure, being the forum to discuss and consider various matters within the electorate and also curly issues before parliament that require community consultation and further consideration, such as the introduction of GMO seed.

A hard and self incriminating question to ask is "Is the elector able to deal with the real political Truth and the ramifications of that Truth, or would they prefer to just watch the footy?' Should we just give up and hand power over to the least corrupt party? I think that is exactly what we have been doing for far too long and thus find ourselves in this predicament. We have already gone down that road many times and may be hoping for a different result. But is this a realistic perspective to have?

Have politicians demonstrated that they can be left alone without firm guidance to do the right thing by their electorate? Are any currently in parliament doing the right thing about freedom of (medical) choice, of movement, of thought and action within the law? George, Malcolm, Pauline, Jacqui, Clive or Bob. Pauline and Clive are murmuring about choices for medication while the jab deaths are climbing and the middle class is financially collapsing. They are not in the streets with or leading the demonstrators. Nearly all appear captured, confused and/or worst of all comfortable. Pauline may be the stand out here: <https://youtu.be/zJuqRx5R0-Q>. We'll see.

Each step of the process of taking back political power requires a degree of electoral commitment, personal and educational development, and vigilance from the voter to put sufficient energy towards every opportunity for consultation. This process must work both ways for sure, not just from the representative towards the electorate, but from the voter in return to their representative. The rep doesn't know what the rep doesn't know.

It is said that 'political events will move people'. Is covid lockstep/lockdown a sufficient enough event to move 'sufficient enough' people to change direction while on the road to political tyranny? I think this is how 'we are managed' by the money-power, in that we are played like a fiddle just under that threshold of sufficient unmoveable numbers to make that trigger occur.

There is also the further issue of lobbyists gaining 'representative time' that may adversely effect outcomes for the electorate. What if - like SA Primary Industries Minister David Basham - the representative clearly goes against the will of their electorate, what then? What options do you and I possess to bring the recalcitrant politician back to order? A mechanism would need to be found to exert sufficient political pressure on the situation to overcome the lobbyists interests, to the point it becomes obvious-political-suicide to defy the will of the electorate any further. An answer was provided by Eric Butler in this 1988 video : Regaining Power By The People <https://www.bitcute.com/video/UcrGmzy0Xgre/>

I realised watching this video that there is hope for the future providing there is sufficient faith, informed political will grounded within action in the field.

Eric presents the unfolding events around the 1988 federal government's intention to introduce an ID card, with the increasing community resistance finding expression in many, many political campaigns occurring behind the scenes. Some campaigns were educational, some were news disseminating, some were directly and specifically targeting against the existing representative.

All were independently run; autonomous campaigns targeting specific electorates to unnerve or/and unseat the recalcitrant politician. Representation coming back to the people will only occur when the people themselves insist (by their actions) to take some of this political power back. Government, meaning politicians, political parties and the bureaucracy will never relinquish political power once seized.

The 'yellow vests' in the Paris streets have been demonstrating regularly each weekend for 3 years with no change in results. The MSM are complicit with their heavy hand of censorship now rarely reporting on these public demonstrations of discontent. Other mechanisms must be sought, especially in the light of further potential lockstep/lockdowns under the covid ruse.

A Realistic Proposal - A Service Movement

A decentralised, autonomous, independent and self-reliant political-service-movement is in order, providing current and reliable news, public education, and support with guided action on the ground to assist each electoral community to regain some effective control of their representative. This has been performed successfully by left wing activist to unseat both Sophie Mirrabella (Indi) and Tony Abbott (Warringah). The left almost unseated Alexander Downer (Mayo) with the same strategy. The active left will continue while others sit on their hands. Can we learn from what the active left are doing?

Education

Province of Alberta, Canada successfully removed their provincial (state) government through a program of public education, focused predominantly around Douglas Social Credit - the Policy of Freedom. An informed public, with reliable News and Educational Information builds the community's Real Credit. Alberta had the then luxury of a Sunday evening radio broadcast and sufficient educational material to overcome a stubborn MSM. Political Education is a valid mechanism for freedom.

Local Political Campaigns

In Eric's video, he explains that in 1988 effective political campaigns were able to achieve a 30% change of voting patterns by reliably informing the public of what was actually going on with their rep & government.

The Vote

Significant training of scrutineers and experienced monitors of the chain-of-custody during the entire election process is imperative if the fraud of our elections is to be reigned in. What is the point of voting if the legitimate votes are not accurately counted and recorded. On this we are babes in the woods. Amy McGrath has produced some excellent material through HS Chapman Society.

"You know, comrades," says Stalin, "that I think in regard to this: I consider it completely unimportant who in the party will vote, or how; but what is extraordinarily important is this — who will count the votes, and how." Memoirs of Stalin's Former Secretary By Boris Bazhanov

<https://www.oxfordreference.com/view/10.1093/acref/9780191843730.001.0001/q-oro-ed5-00010383>

This issue of totalitarianism will not go away anytime soon so a permanent solution of exerting some influence towards our representatives is found (apart from another, after another, after another, political party). The institution of representative parliamentary democracy under a Limited Constitutional Monarchy is worthy of regeneration and restoring to right order for posterity.

VETO

In USA several states have initiated CIR campaigns against public officials over various issues that have occurred during and after their 2020 presidential election. The communities efforts to bring these recalcitrants to account have been thwarted at every opportunity, however, some have managed to get through. As a political mechanism CIR, and especially Voter's VETO is worthy of further consideration for Australia's political circumstances. It's time has come.

This question of hope and faith, when all else appears lost, can be the catalyst for individuals to rise above their (self-perceived) station in life. Eric mentions some of the most difficult times during the Second World War, where young (boy) soldiers without adequate training were faced with difficult circumstances and formidable odds through the jungles of Kokoda. It is from examples such as this, that can inspire our generation to overcome fear, suffering and hardship, in order to achieve a realistic goal of restoring representative government to Australia.

St George overcoming the Dragon is within each providing we have the faith converted into action that overcomes fear. That guiding light of Truth we call our Christian faith is a true light, even though we travel through this modern valley of the shadow of death. ***

The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: He leadeth me beside the still waters. He restoreth my soul: He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for His name's sake. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me. Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies: thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over. Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever.
