SIXPENCE WEEKLY

The Communist Menace and the Crimes Act

By H.R.

With the continued spread of Communism in Asia and across Eastern Europe, and with the periodic disruption of our industries in Australia by Communists and their dupes, many people who value the British way of life and have no desire, despite its shortcomings, to exchange it for socialist totalitarianism or Communist dictatorship, have felt that some action should be taken, without delay, to prevent the further undermining and destruction of our civilisation by the Red enemies of free speech and liberty of action.

Although recent news of Communist activities from overseas, and the disclosures by Mr. Lang and others concerning Communist infiltration into our democratic institutions, and into high Government positions, makes it easy to decide that action should be taken, it is possibly not so easy to decide what particular form that action should take.

Do We Need An Enquiry?

During recent months there has been a demand for a public inquiry into Communist activities in Australia, to uncover the anti-social nature of their work and its insidious effects; but a survey of the literature distributed by Communists for the guidance of their fellow Communists, including the works of Marx, Lenin, and Stalin, and the abundant evidence of the results of their work here and overseas, leads one to wonder what additional evidence of Communist lying, treachery, espionage, treason, double dealing, sabotage, and sedition a Royal Commission could bring to light which is not known to us already.

The writings of Marx, Lenin, and Stalin, from which the Communists absorb inspiration, make it abundantly clear that the ultimate purpose of all Communist activity is the overthrow of "bourgeois democracy" through insurrection and the establishment of what is euphemistically described as the "dictatorship of the proletariat."

The democratic trappings with which the comrades are wont to bedeck themselves are merely so much camouflage to attract the unsuspecting, and to gain entry into circles from which they would be excluded were their real intentions known.

Manufacturing "Facts"

The apparent popularity of what purports to be Communism is used to counterbalance the extreme unpopularity of the real Communism—a device Karl Marx himself wore threadbare, when the fallacy of his theory of the class struggle leading inevitably to revolution was inescapable.

Like our modern economists, he manufactured "facts" to fit his theories, and that which was impossible of achievement by other means was supported and strengthened by subterfuge.

The Crimes Act

The Crimes Act 1914-1932 provides for action against the Communists of the widest possible nature, without a Royal Commission, and without any additional legislation, if the Attorney General really desires to take action.

If the desire of the Attorney-General for action against these enemies of Christian democracy within our shores was as clear cut as the provisions of the Act concerning the activities in which they have indulged, our social institutions, factories, schools, and homes could be cleared of their evil influence in a very short while.

Intimidatory action, such as we witness from the Communist bashers from time to time, could be dealt with under section 28 of the Crimes Act, which provides that:

"Any person who by violence or by threats or intimidation of any kind hinders or interferes with the free exercise or performance, by any other person of any political right or duty, shall be guilty of an offence. Penalty: Imprisonment for three years."

Colac Radio Talks

Regular weekly Social Credit talks are given over Station 3CS Colac every Friday night at 8.45 p.m. Eastern standard time. Wavelength, 1,130 k.c. If you are able to tune into this station don't forget to listen to this stimulating session.

Overthrowing The Constitution

As for those gentle souls whose zeal for a better world makes them impatient with "bourgeois" efforts for a better world through organic growth, and who wish to speed things up by bringing our Parliaments, Courts, and Constitution into contempt, hoping by this means to facilitate Red revolution and the forcible elimination of their opponents, Section 30 has been designed to meet their special case.

Since the Act is worded with such clarity as to make explanation superfluous, we shall quote some sections of the Act as they stand:

OUR POLICY

1. The preservation of Australia's sovereignty as a part of the British Empire, and the exposure of all internal and external groups which attack that sovereignty.
2. The preservation and extension of genuine local government.
3. The preservation and strengthening of all Constitutional safeguards for the purpose of protecting fundamental individual rights.
4. The encouragement of all activities designed to bring Governments under more effective control by the electors.
5. The preservation and extension of genuine free, competitive enterprise and private ownership, and opposition to all Monopoly, whether it be "private" or State.
6. The support of a financial policy which will (a) permit free enterprise to make available to all individuals an increasing standard of living and greater leisure for cultural pursuits; (b) result in no further increase in the community's indebtedness and the sound business practice of gradually reducing existing debt.
7. Recognising that the basis of any sound economy is agriculture, the encouragement of agricultural policies which will ensure the preservation and building up of soil fertility by organic farming and gardening; and the prevention of soil erosion and the protection of forests and watershed.

The Communist Menace and the Crimes

"30C. Any person who by speech or writing advocates or encourages—

"(a) The overthrow of the Constitution of the Commonwealth by revolution or sabotage;

"(b) The overthrow by force or violence of the established government of the Commonwealth or of a State or of any other civilised country or of organised government; or

"(c) The destruction or injury of property of the Commonwealth or of property used in trade or commerce with other countries or among the States, shall be guilty of an offence and shall be liable on conviction to imprisonment for any period not exceeding two years, and, in addition (if he was not born in Australia), to deportation by order of the Attorney-General, as provided in this Act.

Industrial Disturbances

Then we have Section 30J, which would be very effective in dealing with the comrades, who have nothing better to do than to organise industrial strikes with a purely political end in view, such as to embarrass a Government of the wrong political colour, or to embarrass a "Labour" Government and lead the workers closer to the Left, or even to express their contempt for a "bourgeois" Government overseas by depriving it of supplies, through suitable action on the waterfront.

"30J— (i.) If at any time the Governor-General is of opinion that there exists in Australia a serious industrial disturbance prejudicing or threatening trade or commerce with other countries or among the States, he may make a Proclamation to that effect, which Proclamation shall be and remain in operation for the purpose of this section until it is revoked."

The section goes on to provide that any person who, during the operation of the Proclamation, takes part in or incites or urges a strike or lockout, shall be guilty of an offence, and shall be liable on conviction to imprisonment for any period not exceeding one year, and in addition to deportation, if he was not born in Australia.

Section 30K has also been designed to deal with persons who by violence or spoken or written threat or intimidation obstruct the provision of any public service by the Commonwealth, or obstruct or hinder the transport of goods or the conveyance of passengers in trade or commerce with other countries or among the States, or prevent persons offering or accepting employment for that purpose, without reasonable cause or excuse. The penalty is imprisonment for one year.

Seditious Activities

Sections 24C and 24D cover the activities of persons who engage in seditious enterprise or counsel or advise others towards seditious enterprise, the penalty being imprisonment for three years; and Section 25 provides a penalty of imprisonment for life for persons who knowingly attempt to incite mutiny in the King's Forces; whilst Section 70 makes it an offence, punishable with imprisonment for two years, to communicate official secrets.

Seditious intention is defined in Section 24A:

"24A— (1.) Subject to sub-section (2) of this section, an intention to effect any of the following purposes; that is to say—

"(a) To bring the Sovereign into hatred or contempt;

"(b) To incite disaffection against the Sovereign or the Government or Constitution of the United Kingdom, or against either House of the Parliament of the United Kingdom;

"(c) To excite disaffection against the Government or Constitution of any of the King's Dominions;

"(d) To excite disaffection against the Government or Constitution of the Commonwealth or against either House of Parliament of the Commonwealth;

"(e) To excite disaffection against the connection of the King's Dominions under the Crown;

"(f) To excite His Majesty's subjects to attempt to procure the alteration, otherwise than by lawful means, of any matter in the Commonwealth established by law of the Commonwealth; or

"(g) To promote feelings of ill-will and hostility between different classes of His Majesty's subjects so as to endanger the peace, order, or good government of the Commonwealth, is a seditious intention."

Instigating Invasion

Section 24 provides the death penalty for any person within the Commonwealth who instigates or assists the invasion of the Commonwealth, or assists any public enemy.

An examination of Section 30A makes one wonder why the Communist Party has been able to operate in Australia since the Act became law.

This is the exact wording of portion of the section:

"30A—(1) The following are hereby declared to be unlawful associations, namely:—

"(a) Any body of persons, incorporated or unincorporated, which by its constitution or propaganda or otherwise advocates or encourages:

"(i.) The overthrow of the Constitution of the Commonwealth by revolution or sabotage;

"(ii.) The overthrow by force or violence of the established government of the Commonwealth or of a State, or of any other civilised country or of organised government; or

"(iii.) The destruction or injury of property of the Commonwealth or of property used in trade or commerce with other countries or among the States;

"Or which is, or purports to be, affiliated with any organisation which advocates or encourages any of the doctrines or practices specified in this paragraph; . . ."

No Excuse for Mr. Chifley

Now don't say, Mr. Chifley, that you didn't know that our Communists advocate the violent overthrow of our democratic institutions, or that they have incited persons to violence in connection with the numerous industrial disturbances they have engineered, or that they are affiliated with bodies overseas which advocate and encourage the overthrow by force or violence of organised government everywhere but in Russia and her satellites, or that they periodically attend meetings overseas for which purpose your Government permits them to be provided with passports.

How the Attorney-General Can Act

Section 30AA provides the machinery whereby the Attorney-General may take action through the High Court or the Supreme Court of a State for an order calling upon any body of persons to show cause why it should not be declared an unlawful association; and 30AB gives the Attorney-General the necessary power to require persons to answer questions or furnish information, or allow the inspection of documents, or provide information concerning the source or use of funds.

Any person failing or neglecting to answer questions is guilty of an offence, and liable to a penalty of one hundred pounds or imprisonment for six months.

Police Powers

In case the comrades are not very helpful with information, or the Attorney-General believes that additional information could be got from any other source, Section 10 empowers a justice of the peace, if he is satisfied by information on oath, to grant a search warrant authorising "any constable named therein, with such assistance as he thinks necessary, to enter at any time any house, vessel, or place named or described in the warrant, if necessary by force," and to seize anything which would assist him in his efforts against the enemies of democracy.

Taking Individual Action

In view of all the provisions of the Crimes Act covering activities and propaganda such as the Communists continually indulge in, why do Mr. Chifley and Dr. Evatt hesitate to take action against them?

Write and ask them yourself, but don't be satisfied with claims that they lack the necessary evidence upon which to act, or the power to make action possible.

Why not write to your own Parliamentary representative also and request him to demand that action be taken?

The only way democracy can be preserved from the designs of those who seek to destroy it is to deny them the opportunity to do so, and to expose their plans publicly.

The freedoms of democracy should not include the freedom to destroy democracy. By weakly permitting Communists to continue their anti-democratic activities, and to cloak those

How the Soviet prepares for War

The following informative article by the famous Polish Peasant Leader, M. Mikolajczyk, who had to flee from his Soviet dominated country, appeared in the English "Tablet" of July 3, 1948:

Some British and Americans to whom I have talked since my escape from Poland feel that we and the other Eastern European countries were politically persecuted by Russia because we were hotly partisan peoples. The Reds, these people say, are not the instinctive enemies of persons who are bereft of political beliefs.

I can only repeat that Red persecution recognises no political faith.

The world heard about the attacks on the Polish Peasant Party only because the party was organized and because some of us were privileged to lift our voices in indignation. In Poland, certainly, those who belonged to no party were treated just as criminally. Their voices were not heard because there was no organization through which they could speak. They were shot and hanged (and continue to be) in ghastly silence.

Communism and Capitalism

Stalin makes a point of saying, in his interviews with Americans especially, that Communism and Capitalism can exist side by side in the world today. The capitalistic States, he adds, can do business with him.

From a political standpoint, he is partially correct. Poland and Russia lived side by side from 1921 to 1939.

But from an economic viewpoint the man is lying, and the free world should not be tricked into believing that since it sells only to the State when selling to Russia, trade with that country is simplified.

Russia today is a gigantic economic menace to private enterprise everywhere. It has killed, or is in the process of killing, all private enterprise from Eastern Germany to Alaska.

Unlike even the most radical Socialist countries, it did not purchase the industries it has nationalized. And, unlike any other form of government, including the most radical Socialist form, it does not permit its workers the right to strike or quit or seek better pay.

activities from the unsuspecting, our Governments have helped to make revolution fashionable, if not respectable, and have thus helped to increase the ranks and revenues of the Party.

White ants and Red ants should not be tolerated anywhere. The right action at the right time would decrease their numbers considerably and awaken their many dupes the real nature of the Party whose s they support.

Russia's Secret Trade Agreements

There can be no fair competition for world markets if Russia is in the picture. Its output has been stepped up considerably since 1939, and the countless millions of trained workers and professional men it has devoured in the more advanced countries that it has seized have given Russian production a quality it never had before.

Russian trade agreements with the captive States are secret deals by which it is able to suck the sustenance from each country, fix variable prices to be paid for what it needs, rob one country of its raw materials and force another and more industrialized country to deliver the finished product.

Stalin, sitting on top of nearly 300,000,000 human beings, directs their output as easily as a chess master moves a pawn. He does not need the products of the free world. He has everything he needs for war or peace.

The West has demobilized. Russia has not, and in addition has gained the armed forces of many countries. The West believes in the freedom of labour. Russia exploits its tremendous manpower. The West's leaders can be removed from office if they violate the essential rights of their peoples. The Communist gang cannot be removed, and when Stalin dies there will be well-trained men to take his place. The West maintains no secret forces in Russia. Russia maintains sub rosa forces in every country, ready to strike at every weakness.

There were many signs in Poland that the decision to make war on the free world was gaining pace. Travellers from Russia kept us informed about the tempo within that country, and daily we watched the moulding of Poland into a Soviet State which would be forced to aid in that conflict.

Perhaps the most vivid of the evidence was supplied by a Russian colonel whom I cannot name by name. I can only assure the reader that he does exist, that he did hold for me a certain affection, and that he never believed I would manage to get out of Poland to make this report.

Soviet General's Evidence

"I've just returned from the USSR," he told me just before I escaped. "The preparation for the war is everywhere. The people are now as ready for it as they were ready for Hitler's attack. Molotov is the new head of the war party. His picture now is displayed on the same level with that of Stalin. Pictures of the victorious Tsarist Generals, Suvorov and Kutuzov, are displayed everywhere through the country. I don't know whether our scientists have as yet been able to produce atom bombs, but we have

NEW CIRCULATION DRIVE ANNOUNCED

Although there has, over the past twelve months, been a steady increase in the total revenue of "The New Times" and although wage costs have been reduced by several pounds per week, our printing and other costs have increased to such an extent that immediate action must be taken to improve the financial position of the paper if it is to survive IN ITS PRESENT FORM. The cost of publishing "The New Times" is £16 per week more than it was eighteen months ago.

Mr. John Weller has recently resigned from the paper and has taken another job which enables him, with the aid of voluntary workers, to look after the editorial and business side of The New Times in a voluntary capacity. The wrapping of the paper is also now being done by volunteers, thus making a further financial saving.

We are pleased to report that these emergency measures are enabling the paper to pay its way for the first time for several years.

But it is urgently necessary that we increase our positive efforts to expand our circulation more rapidly. Although various attempts have been made to encourage present readers to get new direct subscribers, they have not been a great success.

As many have told us that they would prefer to pay a trial subscription for another person rather than ask him for money, we are launching a campaign to get at least 1,000 supporters, each to pay for a half-yearly subscription (at a reduced rate of 10/ instead of 13/) to a responsible member of their community. (If any reader cannot select a suitable person for a trial subscription, The New Times will be pleased to attend to the matter.)

If 1,000 supporters will co-operate in this campaign, the revenue of The New Times will be increased sufficiently to enable further progressive moves to be made. The vital information published in The New Times will be regularly going to another 1,000 "key" members of the community.

At the end of the half-year it is estimated that, after receiving a special letter, a considerable number of the 1,000 will continue as permanent readers.

Surely 1,000 people can each pay 10 to carry out this important project. At a special meeting of Melbourne New Times supporters last week those present indicated their willingness to assist.

made great strides with rocket developments. We are training special units for service in each country of Europe. The units of instructors for France, Italy, and Germany are ready, and so is the one for Spain. We are preparing others, of course, for the South American countries—where we have made considerable gains of late."

"Personally," he went on, "I am not as confident about the economic collapse of the United States as the leaders are, but I agree that Great Britain is already in that collapse. Our men prepare the way for us in France and Italy, and they hope to bring about changes in the Government there so that the Red Army will not be forced to march in. But, even if they fail, there are plans for the Army to move into those lands. The American, British, and French occupation forces in Germany will offer a token resistance, but they will naturally be liquidated. We have military plans to take Europe in less than a fortnight. Great Britain will remain neutral. It cannot endure another rocket war. The United States will declare war, but what does that matter? It is not prepared. It can have no offshore bases from which to attack the continent. We do not rule out the possibility of a negotiated peace with America."

The Cold War

As is its traditional fate, Poland felt the first repercussions of the cold war. In April 1947, the Communist head of the Polish Security Police, the NKVD leader Stanislaw Radkiewicz, called a hurried meeting of province and district Communist leaders in Lodz and made formal announcement of the forthcoming conflict. Until the day Radkiewicz spoke at Lodz it had been a criminal offence for a Pole to mention the possibility of a World War III. Thereafter, the 100,000,000 persons living behind the Iron Curtain—as well as Russia's 180,000,000—began to be primed mentally for the war and to be encouraged to speak of it.

"There will be a war with the West," Radkiewicz told the assembled Polish Red leaders. "This war will be won by the U.S.S.R. Of that there must be no doubt. The important thing at the start is to indoctrinate the people. They must be told, first, that American capitalists want to rule the world. They must be told that these capitalists fear the economic collapse of the United States, and in order to avert that catastrophe they have forced their Government into a policy of worldwide imperialism so that a war will result. . . In Poland we must quickly prepare for that war by liquidating the remnants of independent thought and action. We have been entirely too liberal inside Poland. We must hasten the communization of the country. We must liquidate dissident factions in the Socialist Party, and, of course, complete the extinction of the Polish Peasant Party."

Decentralise For Liberty

"It is my belief that if we carry into these years [ahead] the present system of concentrated economic powers and practices of both capital and labour, of concentrated populations, of concentrated industries of concentrated government domination and direction, of heavy taxation with its destructive effects on community and individual initiative and independence, of the steady impairment of our soil and water and the destruction of our forests and of irreplaceable minerals and oils, of the prevailing greed of various privilege-seeking groups, we cannot possibly avoid economic disaster. . . . Yet it is a fact that the dominant thinking of the moment simply proposes a continuation, with ever-increasing government interference, of this same hopeless system," —Decentralise for Liberty, by Thomas Hughes.

Mr. Hughes was Assistant Secretary for Fiscal Affairs (U.S.A.).

OBITUARY

We regret to report the death, after a short illness, of George Francis Althoper at the age of 77 years. The late Geo. F. Althoper was one of the early pioneers of Social Credit in the Wellington district of New South Wales, and remained a staunch adherent to the day of his death. He was perhaps best known for his breeding of new and better varieties of fruit. His most famous creation was the Dripstone peach, which is recognised today as the world's largest commercial peach; the "Glen Ora" peach, "Glen Ora" plum, Burrill almond, Elizabeth Bailey apple, and many others. About a dozen new and improved varieties were about to be given to the world on eve of his death. He is survived by his wife, three daughters, and two sons.

THE RED PRUSSIAN (Karl Marx)

By Leopold Schwarzschild

This is the most powerful debunking of Karl Marx yet published. The author strips away the legend of Marx and reveals Marx the man. The extracts from the private correspondence of Marx and Engels will make bitter reading for Socialists and Communists. Every anti-Communist propagandist must have this book. (19/3 Post Free.)

Fair Comment

A distinguished and competent Australian Social Crediter recently addressed a meeting of bankers in connection with the proposed nationalisation of the Australian Banks.

One of his audience commented, "After hearing what Social Crediters are really trying to accomplish, I have come to the conclusion that some so-called Social Crediters are the worst enemies Social Credit has."

Well, of course, we prefer that someone else should have said it. —The Social Crediter (Eng.), Aug. 17.

AND NOW DISINFLATION

By FOOTLE

I have on many previous occasions mentioned the difficulty I have in understanding this money business. I seem to have it quite straight in my mind until I read an article on the subject by an expert; then I'm in trouble. The most recent blow to my comprehension was dealt by an unsigned article in the August Review published by the Institute of Public Affairs, Victoria, and it came just as I thought I had recovered from the nasty knock delivered by Prof. G. L. Wood, which I mentioned in a recent issue.

I started off with a blithe spirit, a clear head, and eight whole pages of "Inflation" before me. "If I can't get something out of this," I reasoned, "I'd better hie me to a psychiatrist for an overhaul of the cranial gibbosities."

For a time all went well; there were several bits I understood—or thought I did—but very soon I had reverted to my financial norm, so that by the time I came to the statistical table the figures could have come from a logarithm table or a railway guide, for aught they meant to me.

Spending War-time Wages

I had, of course, no difficulty in understanding that money paid in wages for war purposes was liable to be spent by the people receiving it. In fact, my memory of World War I. was that they spent it with considerable gusto so that pianos, gramophones, and kindred amenities suddenly found themselves in large quantities and hitherto strange surroundings.

That was unreasonable, of course; the people could have been overwhelmed by inflation at any moment, but that didn't seem to occur to anybody, least of all the politicians. What I can't seem to remember, though, is shortages—except when in England, a shortage of meat and sugar. This time we have been more scientific: we have proved that the tendency to inflation must have been there, because by restricting all wanted goods by regulation it became obvious that people would pay almost anything for what they wanted. No morals at all!

Losing the Thread

Soon after this, however, I lost the thread of the beastly argument. Having obtained what the article calls "an imbalance" by restricting production—not caused by war, as he freely admits—the writer informs us that "Price control of itself does nothing to correct inflation," because "it intensifies the inflationary pressure by maintaining the purchasing power of the money held by the public."

It is quite evident, then, that the problem is to get purchasing power away from the public without permitting them to spend it. This would correct the inflationary tendency caused by restrictions and embargoes on production.

No economist likes the idea of "the public" having any money, and the writer of the article in question is no exception, for he complains that "the unprecedented increase in export income (309 £m in 1946-47) . . . has greatly complicated the difficulties of restoring stability." Prosperity is a confounded nuisance; it's so difficult to make sense of it. And it isn't as though the experts had consciously done anything to cause it, either.

An Unexpected Clearing

Although, as I said, I lost the thread of the argument why money and prosperity are bad for us, I stumbled into an unexpected clearing wherein I was enabled to perceive the professed objective of the writer.

He wants an easing of the general irksomeness, though two of his proposals strike me as somewhat ambitious.

One is to "lighten the taxation burden and at the same time to realise a substantial budget surplus," which appears to me an attempt to combine incompatible, if not mutually, exclusive ingredients of our economy; and the other is, "Self-discipline on the part of the business community in fixing prices," which will probably come about when the whole community exhibits the same quality. And the wolf shall lie down with the lamb.

The New Process

The process combining all the writer's wishful, remedies has a name. It has been used recently by Prof. Copland over the air. The name is "Disinflation."

We are exhorted not to misconceive. Disinflation is not Deflation. Deflation leaves you flat; Disinflation merely takes some of the wind out of you. There may be a greater difference, of course, for although when one is disinclined, one would naturally decline, it is not so clear whether, if one were disinterested, one would deter—or at any rate what or whom one would deter.

But the idea will appear subtle to some; especially to those who have no wind to spare. However, everything is relative, and much depends on the point of view. For instance, Absalom, could he see me, might regard me as being as bald as Micawber, but then, how would I look to a man who had to chalk his pate to avoid a miscue when heading a soccer ball?

And, after all, one finds the same niceties in the matter of direct taxation. Income tax is not to be confused with social service contribution, although there are lots of people who can't see the difference between a tax and a compulsory contribution.

But on the whole I don't know whether I have been enlightened or just dazzled. I am inclined to think that all I have gained is another word.

Twelve Annual Subscriptions Donated

In response to our campaign to get 1,000 of our supporters each to subscribe 10/ for a half-yearly subscription to a selected member of their community, one Melbourne reader has paid—at our usual rates—for twelve people to get The New Times for one year.

Here is an inspiring example for all. Send YOUR 10/ today, together with the name and address of the person to whom you desire the paper to be sent.

MORE SOCIALISM FROM THE MELBOURNE "HERALD"

As we have never tired of pointing out, there are only two ways of getting individuals to do things in this world: by compulsion or by inducement. Socialistic planning inevitably leads to compulsion, but genuine free, competitive enterprise, controlled by consumers having adequate money "votes," would permit every individual increasing liberty.

Although the "big capitalist" Press is supposed to be fighting Socialism tooth-and-nail, it is instructive to note that the policy of the Melbourne "Herald"—to take only one "capitalist" paper—has invariably been to support compulsion as a basis of the community's economic arrangements. In a sub-editorial in its issue of September 7 the "Herald" supports the campaign to compel traders to provide home deliveries for housewives. The "Herald" urges the Victorian Government to make it clear that it will apply compulsion to traders if they will not co-operate to provide home deliveries. The New South Wales Labour Government is mentioned favourably because of its Home Deliveries Act.

While we have the greatest sympathy with the present plight of the housewives, we point out that the present lack of service is the result of the arbitrary "planning" already imposed by Governments. Genuine service based upon adequate inducement will not be provided until such time as the "planners" are removed from their present positions. Most of the "planners" are Socialists, and they are well aware that the policies they are pursuing make it increasingly difficult for free enterprise to serve the consumer adequately. This situation then provides an excuse to make out that free enterprise will not supply the consumer unless compelled to do so by Governments. The only compulsion necessary is that which consumers can apply themselves—providing that there is genuine competition, and that free enterprise is not hampered by any artificial factors. For example, the imposition of further petrol rationing does not make the lot of the trader any easier. Further, increased costs resulting from the Federal Government's financial policies are another important factor which many traders must seriously consider at present.

If it can be shown that any group in the community is exploiting the community by denying them the right of a genuine alternative, electors can and should take action through their Government to prevent such exploitation. But there is, unfortunately, a growing tendency amongst many electors to expect Governments to manage all their affairs instead of taking action to do something for themselves.

We venture to predict that if enough housewives decided to bake their own bread for a few weeks, they would soon break up some of the monopolistic practices such as bread zoning, etc., which many housewives have been complaining about for some time.

But the basic causes of the lack of service today can be traced back to the economic and financial policies being imposed from Canberra. Unless these policies can be reversed, Socialism must come by one method or another. The "Herald" is doing its best to help the cause along.

A MENACE TO ALL NATIONS

Why should the ownership of British industry be allowed to pass into foreign hands?

One answer is that an entanglement of international obligations and debts in every direction gives enormous power to the international financiers, and makes the money power doubly master. Any attempt by a nation to set its house in order in such circumstances immediately raises international questions and becomes an interference with contracts made with the citizens of a foreign State. With the Press at its disposal, international finance can, with the greatest ease, in this way inflame one nation against another when any interference with its operations is attempted, the real inwardness of the proceedings being completely concealed from the people concerned. Thus the armed forces of the nations are always potentially—and at times, actually—at the service of international finance for the purpose of coercing other nations into submission. The operations of these men constitute the greatest danger to the peace of the world, and are a menace to all nations.

Selected Advertising Accepted

In view of the increased size of The New Times, the Board of Directors has decided to make a limited amount of space available to selected advertising. Advertising not in keeping with the policy of the paper will not be accepted.

We point out to prospective advertisers that, although the circulation of The New Times is not large compared with, the daily Press, it has a very special type of reader for whom it caters. For example an increasing number of business men are taking The New Times in order that they can keep themselves well informed on current events.

Our representative will call on anyone considering taking advantage of our offer to make limited space available for advertising.

Our rate for canal advertising (single insertion) is 4 per column inch, payable in advance.

Sir, —The further rebuff of the High Court to Nationalisation should plainly show to the Chifley Government that the Australian peoples prefer the democratic way of life to a robot state of "socialism."

The question that is now asked is, has the Government any real constitutional powers to nationalise any form of business and enter into a government of shopkeepers, instead of a government of legislators?

Without consultation in any form whatsoever, the majority of Australian citizens have been kept browbeaten and controlled by ill-timed and ill-judged monopolies of "socialism" that have kept our peoples in a state of frantic suspense as to what further state of robotism would be expected.

In spite of our people's desires as evidenced by various referendums definitely and resolutely outlawing "socialism," the Federal Government shuts its ears and eyes to facts with no thought of its actions as viewed through democratic conditions.

On the one hand we have a continual, meddlesome interference with private enterprise by the golden age theorists that is driving production to the wall, and on the other hand we witness the tactics of frankly inspired Communism from a militant and foreign land, foully hiding its Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde tactics under cover of socialism under protection of the flag of Democracy.

The primary producer is being destroyed piecemeal by seizure of his products that is bankrupting him, whilst the rest of the world waits in starvation on the city farmers' pleasures and meddlesome interference of the bureaucratic Canberra dukes and princes.

Whilst the primary producer and the employer in secondary industry groan beneath the burden of crippling taxation to pay for the tin-pot legislative shopkeepers' actions, the 5th column

"socialists" do all possible to prevent production by making primary production impossible to carry on, with an eye to collective farming, or by urging the workers in secondary industry to defy arbitration and conciliation so as to close the factory doors and bring misery and acts of violence in line with their objectives.

It is a fact that, whilst the meddlesome legislative Parliamentary traders impose a tax on the rabbit, the Parliamentary traders won't permit a yard of rabbit-netting to come into the country in case the Commo pals in Australian wire-netting factories miss out; and it is horribly true that whilst our peoples are denied hundreds of items of primary production tools of trade on account of what is so humorously described as the dollar position, there are some millions of pounds worth of futile Hollywood coming into this country and turning the youth of the day into nit-wits and fools.

If Australia faces another drought, and on top of this the 5th column closes our factory doors, bringing production to a minimum, with thousands out of work, and legislative trading destroys healthy production, must Australia starve in despair, or face invasion by hordes of invaders whose fight for survival goes beyond political moonshine theories.

Yours, &c., L. S.

COMMUNISTS BEHIND " THE ROCK?

Mr. CREMEAN, Legislative Assembly, 25th August:

In my opinion, the paper (The Rock) follows the Communist line.

It is seeking to divide the community and to incite public disorder.

Recently, in Sydney, an inducement was conveyed in the paper for members of the community to raid the Lewisham convent. Unfortunately for the persons instigating the raid, their nefarious design became known, and when they endeavoured to carry out their plan they found a body of men at the convent to protect the innocent and helpless nuns.

In the subsequent melee the attackers ran away and left certain possessions behind them. One happened to be a card that I have in my hand. It gives the name and address of a person named A. Ashwood.

He is a man belonging to the Communist Party, employed by the Commonwealth Aircraft Corporation at Lidcombe, who seeks by this type of sectarianism to destroy in this or some other overt way the unity of the public.

Mr. BARRY (Carlton): Some time ago officers of the Melbourne City Council took the names and addresses of persons selling The Rock to see if action could be taken against them by the council.

I am mentioning this because of a serious issue attaching to it. The files relating to what I am about to say can be seen at the office of the council, and a colleague of mine, who is also a member of the committee dealing with these matters, can substantiate my statements.

It was remarkable that it was found that, of four names taken at that time, three persons gave as their address the headquarters of the Communist Party, Melbourne.

"From Smoke to Smother"

By Douglas Reed.

This important book can be regarded as a sequel to Douglas Reed's famous book, Insanity Fair. Reed exposes the groups, which he contends are making another world war inevitable. He also gives the most detailed exposure of the totalitarian policies of the British Socialist Government yet published. He deals with the large number of Zionist Jews in the British Government, the imposition of bread rationing, the taking of the traditional liberties of the British people, and many other vital matters.

From Smoke to Smother is Douglas Reed at his best. A must for every serious student of present-day affairs.

"Social Credit and Catholicism"

By George-Henri Levesque, O.P. Professor of Economics. Laval and Montreal Universities, Dominican House of Studies, Ottawa.

Because of the rapid progress of Social Credit ideas in the French-Canadian Province of Quebec which Major Douglas has described as having "probably the most genuine Catholic culture under the British this booklet is particularly important. Eric Butler has written an excellent introduction. There is also an Appendix outlining the structure and methods of the non-Party Union of Electors in Quebec.

The author of Social Credit and Catholicism finishes his booklet with the following: "... if you want neither Socialism nor Communism, bring Social Credit in array against them. It will be in your hands a powerful weapon with which to fight these enemies."

INSIDE RED RUSSIA

By J. J. Maloney, M.L.C.

The author of this revealing book was Australian Minister to Moscow from 1943 to 1945. He saw Russia as an Australian Labour man officially visiting a Socialist State. He was horrified at what he saw. He has outlined in detail a record of tyranny, which must be given the widest possible distribution throughout Australia.

THE HOMESTEAD ECONOMY

By JORIAN JENKS

(Concluded from Previous Issue. Reprinted from "The Small Farmer")

It is usually at this point that the critic of small production objects "That's all very well, but—does it pay? After all, ours is a money-economy, and the producers' cash-profit is just as necessary to him as a wage is to the worker. Whatever the merits of small production may be, the awkward fact remains that its cash rewards, over a period of years, compare very unfavorably with those obtained in other walks of life."

This criticism has substance. The authors of The Small Man On The Land, for instance, are of the opinion that "there was ample evidence before the war, that, while there was considerable variety in the earnings of individuals, the earnings of the family farmer were, on average, low and indeed insufficient to provide a reasonable standard of living." Even during the war, the cash income often with less than fifty acres was little more than the minimum farm wage, and, of course, much below industrial earnings. The accounts of several thousand farms collected and analysed by the N.F.U. indicate that during 1942-43 and 1943-44, while profits per acre were in inverse ratio to size of farm, profits per farm varied with its size. In other words, the fewer acres a man farmed, the more he earned from each acre; but the smaller his total income.

Relating Facts

Facts, however, are awkward or not according to the way in which they are interpreted and related to other facts. If the small producer on the land could be considered as the precise economic equivalent of the salary or wage earner in the city, the fact that his cash earnings are small would indeed be a serious matter. It is serious enough, certainly, to call for a more constructive policy. But we shall never arrive at such a policy by trying to reduce everything to money values.

What do we use cash for? Obviously for buying those things which we cannot produce for ourselves. For the urban worker this means almost everything. That is why it is only right that his cash income should be as large as possible. But the things, which we can produce for ourselves, need not be bought; they are dear at any price. Clearly the small producer does not (or should not) need to buy much by way of food or home. In this respect he is substantially better off than those who appear to earn good incomes, but have to pay them all out again in order to obtain the things that make life worth living. He can give his family better food (because fresher and more wholesome) than a millionaire can obtain at fancy prices in the West End. He has a home which, being part of his farm, is included in its rent and involves no unproductive outlay of time and money on travel. He has plenty of occupation (sometimes almost too much), and because it is of direct interest to him has the less need of "leisure" and "pleasure." To him, social amenities and an occasional holiday are enjoyable relaxations, not indispensable antidotes to unsatisfying or nerve-straining labour. His chief economic asset, in fact, is the extent to which he can contract out of the money system.

Present Financial System

That is not to say that he can dispense with money altogether. He must buy boots and clothing, household utensils and certain groceries, reading matter and wireless licences; for the farm, tools and seeds, occasionally livestock; and there are, of course, various small outgoings, and wages for any help employed. But his biggest cash outgoing derives less from the nature of his own economy than from that of the general money system. The smaller the holding, the larger the capital expenditure on buildings and other forms of fixed equipment that it represents.

Under our existing financial system, this money capital demands rent or interest at a relatively high rate. It is notorious that small holdings, owing largely to the keen demand for them, always tend to be over-valued and over-rented. . . . The small producer pays in interest proportionately to his turnover, more than does the large producer, and much more than does the trader or industrialist. Often he is gravely handicapped by dilapidated or inadequate buildings, or lack of water or electricity, simply because his holding cannot bear any more capital charges. . . .

The economic case for the intelligent fostering of small production on the land can be stated quite simply. Our whole national future depends on our ability to provide our people with the Food, Homes, and Work which they need. Unless national vigour is drawn from sound indigenous roots, no amount of juggling with the books, no excursions into power politics, can save us from the social neurosis which is already rampant in many countries and gathering momentum here at home.

The Two Ways

There are two ways in which the attempt to secure Food, Homes, and Work

THE MIXED FARM IS THE KEY TO NATIONAL PROSPERITY

"Wool is still the corner-stone of Australia's economic edifice," the Lieutenant-Governor (Sir Edmund Herring) said when opening the Ballarat Sheep Show.

Wool, he said, was the one industry that did not have to be helped along the road, and the one, which had always stood on its own feet.

Great populations living in cities, the Lieutenant-Governor said, take little interest in the country and its problems, or how much the man on the land is doing, but anybody who took the trouble to learn something of history will know that wool is the basis of Australia's economy.

Australia had a great future, he said, but we would only fulfil our destiny if we applied those same qualities of courage, endurance, self-reliance, and enterprise which had characterised the pioneers of the wool industry for the past 100 years.

However, when we examine in detail the vast and varied nature of our resources we should pause to consider whether indeed Australia has ridden to wealth on the sheep's back as the Lieutenant-Governor says, or whether the sheep has stamped in our face.

Despite the fact that wool is our greatest income producer, there are vast tracts of country in eastern Australia suitable for mixed farming, with the capacity to carry millions of people which should be developed.

This could be done without affecting the bulk of our woolgrowing sheep. — Reprinted from NewsWeekly.

can be made. The first is the complicated nineteenth century way which so appeals to the mechanically minded. It involves large exports of manufactures, coal, and services in order to finance correspondingly large imports of primary products. . . .

The second way we can obtain Food, Homes, and Work is simple and direct. For that reason it is seldom mentioned in the textbooks. It may yet be called the twentieth century way, though in essence it is as old as the hills. It consists of setting more of our own people to work on our own land, growing the food that we need, and at the same time making their homes there. That is not to say that we should empty our cities forthwith and plant out each family on its own plot. Cities have their functions, and it is only when they develop elephantiasis that they become social problems and economic incubi. What is important is that we should begin now to recultivate our national roots to correct the top-heaviness and lopsidedness of an obsolescent economy, and to reverse that social drift from field to factory, from home to tenement, that we have hitherto regarded as symptoms of Progress.....

If we want to incorporate small rural production as a major element in our national design for living – and how shall we ever attain true social security without it? —there is no valid reason why we should not do so forthwith. There is the land-and there are the people. The only thing that keeps them apart is an obsolete concept of economic efficiency.

Is There a Jewish Menace?

Eric D. Butler's "best-seller," "The International Jew," will provide you with the answer to the above question.

At a time when Western civilisation is being shaken to its foundations, and the forces of evil appear to be in the ascendant, this detailed examination of those amazing documents, "The Protocols of Zion," must be read by every responsible citizen. Mr. Butler takes extract after extract from these documents and compares them with actual events. The result is frightening.

"The International Jew" is worth purchasing even if only to read the comprehensive introduction, which deals with the origins of "The Protocols" and the arguments which have been advanced attempting to prove that they are a "forgery" or a mere "plagiarism."

The Jewish influence behind Communism is exhaustively analysed. Detailed information is given of the financing of the Russian Revolution by the German-Jewish international financial groups. "The International Jew" clearly reveals Soviet Russia's role in the present world drama.

"Anti-semitism" is shown to be an instrument used by international Jews to further their policy of world domination.

"The International Jew" remorselessly places the spotlight of exposure upon those individuals responsible for the present world turmoil. Mr. Butler does little speculation; he lets the facts he has collected tell their own dramatic story.

A Selected List Of Books On Organic Farming And Gardening

"Pay Dirt".....24/9

By J. I. Rodale, leading American authority on organic farming and gardening. This book is one of our special recommendations.

"The Living Soil" . . . 19/9

By Lady Balfour. This is a most exhaustive survey of the relationship of human and animal health to soil fertility. This excellent book is suitable for either the layman or the agricultural specialist.

"The Rope of the Earth" 33/6

By Jacks and Whyte. This book is probably the most comprehensive world survey of soil erosion yet published. A real classic.

"The Land Now and Tomorrow".....20/-

By Sir R. George Stapledon. A famous English authority surveys the whole gigantic problem of land utilisation and reclamation, from the urban no less than the rural point of view. Contains a large number of beautiful plates.

"The Earth's Green

Carpet"..... 14/3

By Louise E. Howard. In part 1 of this important book the widow of the late Sir Albert Howard deals with the wheel of life, the growth of the plant, and the agricultural effort and its reward. In part 2 the application of the principles outlined in part 1 are studied. Part 3 outlines the new approach to the problem of health and disease.

"The Farming Ladder" 14/3

By George Henderson. Acclaimed by A. G. Street in the English Farmers' Weekly as "the most valuable book on farming published during the last hundred years." An intensely practical book for practical farmers. Henderson shows how he has been able to make over £3,000 per year off approximately 80 acres.

"Humus—And the Farmer" £1

By Friend Sykes. The story of how a leading English farmer sold his property in the fertile Thames Valley and proved how soil worth only £4 per acre could be improved to give big yields. This practical writer answers convincingly the argument that organic farming can only be conducted on a small scale. Deals with large-scale compost making by suitable machinery. The prices listed above include postage. Order now from New Times Ltd., Box 1226L, G.P.O., Melbourne.

"I Planted Trees"

By Richard St. Barbe Baker

This beautifully written book should be on the bookshelves of every tree lover. One of the world's greatest authorities on forestry tells of his work in all parts of the world, including Australia. A thrilling story which cannot fail to inspire the reader. The book contains a large number of really excellent photos.

"But trees cast a shadow. The forest resources of the world are dwindling, and the author's urgent warning of difficulties ahead unless we plant now and plan wisely for the future cannot be ignored"

COUNTRY LIVING

"The Family Farmer" 17/3

By F. D. Smith and Barbara Wilcox. Their foreword to this fascinating book the authors write: "The expert will tell you how to grow crops. The economist will tell you whether the small farm can pay. But only the family farmers themselves can tell you about the family farmers and how they live."

"Where Man Belongs" 15/9

By H. J. Massingham. In this book the great English writer on rural matters "sets out to show how such giants of literature as Shakespeare and Jane Austen drew inspiration from the rural craftsmen. Shakespeare, sprung from his native soil and haunted by his home throughout the whole range of his plays, he sees as the genius of the essential England."

"The Small Farmer" 10/6

Edited by H. J. Massingham. In this book six practical authorities give a comprehensive picture of the conditions, values achievements, history, and general husbandry of the type of farmer who has been the foundation of the national life. Although dealing with English conditions, it should be read by all those concerned with fostering the growth of the small-scale mixed farming in Australia.

FAITH, POWER, AND ACTION

By L. D. Byrne.

In this thought-provoking and stimulating booklet, L. D. Byrne, former economic adviser to the Albertan Social Credit Government, and one of the greatest thinkers in the Social Credit Movement, outlines a "metaphysical analysis which, when understood, cannot fail to thrill and inspire the Christian with a fuller realisation of the tremendous implications of his Faith. . . . It provides the foundation for a personal policy without which there can be no basis for an effective association of Christians." Byrne prefaces Part I. of his booklet: "Faith is the very essence of Social Credit and the only basis upon which an enduring human society can function."
