The "Dollar Crisis" and Manpower Control

Conscription in Socialist Britain

(A Radio Talk over 3SR, Shepparton, by Eric D. Butler.) Over twenty years ago the famous English writer, Hilaire Belloc, pointed out that when men re-introduced an ancient evil, such as slavery, they used suitable terms in an endeavour to camouflage their intentions. Belloc said that he would await with interest the terms used to describe the re-introduction of slavery. Slavery is being increasingly imposed in various parts of the world today. It is true that it is not termed slavery, but slavery is the correct description of the direction of labour, which is one of the main characteristics of all totalitarian countries.

A correspondent recently wrote to a Melbourne daily newspaper and complained about a League of Rights advertisement, which stated that there was manpower control in Great Britain, and that Socialism in practice always led to direction of labour.

In case there are others who do not believe that Socialism in practice leads to manpower control, let us deal with this matter in detail. Under the Control of Engagement Order, 1947, passed in November of 1947, the British Socialist Government took the first major step towards imposing slavery upon the British people.

Way Was Paved

It is instructive to recall that the way was carefully paved for the Control of Engagement Order by the start of the "dollar crisis."

After the necessary preliminary propaganda in August of last year, announced that, because of "dollar crisis," they were compelled to introduce increased controls. Many competent observers in Great Britain did not mince terms in expressing the opinion that the "dollar crisis" had been deliberately encouraged in order to further Socialist policies. The peoples of all parts of the British Empire are now confronted with another instalment of the "dollar crisis," with the result that they are now threatened with still more controls. The 25 per cent reduction in dollar imports recently agreed to in London will be used as an excuse for more austerity. Mr. Chifley will now be able to use the "dollar crisis" to intensify controls in this country.

There will be renewed talk of the necessity of building up certain industries in order to concentrate on increasing exports to dollar areas. Professor Copland and other economic advisers have already done some kite flying on this matter.

Labour Control

But if this proposal is to be put into practice, direction of labour will be necessary to ensure that the selected industries can function.

We warn Australians to beware of local Socialist planners attempting to use the "dollar crisis" to do what their fellow planners are doing in Great Britain. It is our considered opinion that the "dollar crisis" is largely the result of the policies pursued by the British Socialist Government, policies which Mr. Chifley also supports. It is interesting to note that the Chifley Government's principal economic adviser, Dr. H. C. Coombs, who has openly expressed himself in favour of the direction of labour, attended the recent Conference in London at which the "dollar crisis" was discussed.

What Happened in Britain

Australians can learn how to avert the threat of direction of labour by examining how it was introduced in Great Britain. As soon as the first talk of the "dollar crisis" started in Great Britain last year, the Communists were to the forefront in demanding direction of labour.

On July 15, 1947, Trade Union leader Mr. Arthur Deakin said: "I am prepared to say now that we must of necessity accept a limited direction of labour." Thus the way was paved for the British Government to go ahead, confident that it had the support of the so-called representatives of the workers. On August 7, 1947, Sir Stafford Cripps, the British high priest of austerity and controls, and the man whom Mr. Chifley frequently quotes, told the British House of Commons that "It has been decided to stop, by negative control, further people from going into the less necessary industries." Note how nicely Sir

Stafford explained the first step towards slavery.

But after the first step had been taken, it was easier to take the next step. As the "dollar crisis" got worse, more and more statements were made making it clear that direction of labour might be essential. By November of 1947 the final step had been taken.

OUR POLICY

1. The preservation of Australia's sovereignty as a part of the British Empire, and the exposure of all internal and external groups which attack that sovereignty.
2. The preservation and extension of genuine local government.
3. The preservation and strengthening of all Constitutional safeguards for the purpose of protecting fundamental individual rights.
4. The encouragement of all activities designed to bring Governments under more effective control by the electors.
5. The preservation and extension of genuine free, competitive enterprise and private ownership, and opposition to all Monopoly, whether it be "private" or State.
6. The support of a financial policy which will (a) permit free enterprise to make available to all individuals an increasing standard of living and greater leisure for cultural pursuits; (b) result in no further increase in the community's indebtedness and the sound business practice of gradually reducing existing debt.
7. Recognising that the basis of any sound economy is agriculture, the encouragement of agricultural policies which will ensure the preservation and building up of soil fertility by organic farming and gardening; and the prevention of soil erosion and the protection of forests and watersheds.

Now, when our land to ruin's brink is verging,
In God's name, let us speak while there is time!
Now, when the padlocks for our lips
are forging,
Silence is crime. WHITTIER.

The Dollar Crisis

The Use of Crises

It has of course, been argued that the Control of Engagement Order in Great Britain has not been very rigidly imposed. That is true, but now that the "dollar crisis" has become more acute, all controls will be extended. There can be no argument that Socialism thrives on crises. That is why one section of the Socialists, the Communists, openly welcomes war of any description. The controllers of Soviet Russia gave Hitler the all-clear signal in Poland in 1939 because they felt that a second European war would further their policies. Consider the plight of Eastern Europe, China, and other parts of the world today.

It would be wrong to say that all Socialists deliberately engineer crises for the purpose of imposing more controls, but the policies of Socialism inevitably produce conditions, which provide the excuse far more and more controls. If we are to defeat the threat of slavery, we must be clear about this matter. At least many of the most famous Socialist leaders have said frankly that Socialism, the centrally planned society, cannot be implemented without manpower control. Mr. George Bernard Shaw, one of the founders of the Fabian Socialist Society, said back in 1921 that Socialism in practice means compulsory direction of labour with death as the final penalty for those who will not obey.

Disguised Slavery

In his book, "The Programme of the World Revolution," the famous Socialist of last century, Bucharin, outlined the necessity for a centrally-planned economy and then went on to say that this could only be made possible "by means of introducing labour record books and labour service. Everyone of the above-named class (the rich) should receive a special book in which an account is kept of his work, that is to say, his compulsory service."

It will be recalled that when direction of labour was introduced in Great Britain last year, not only was it argued that it was essential to prevent workers from going to the less essential industries, but that the "spivs," "drones" and "butterfiles" must be also directed to work. Totalitarians always have some excuse to try and divert attention from their real intentions. Bucharin, whom we have just quoted, was at least frank about his advocacy of direction of labour. He wrote: "Of course labour service for the rich should only be a transitional stage towards general labour service." "Labour service" is another term used to describe slavery. It was used by Hitler and his National Socialists. Irrespective of the terms used, freedom-loving people must resist any policy, which seeks to compel them to work as, where, and when a Government official directs. The right to choose his own work and his place of abode, is a fundamental right which every individual should protect in the face of all propaganda about crises, dollar or otherwise.

TO THE POINT

Conservative-Socialism

"Now that the Socialists have adopted the Conservatives' foreign policy, and the Conservatives have adopted the Socialists' domestic policy, there is nothing left to quarrel about except the administrative details: not what should be done, which is agreed, but how and by whom. There is only one end to this kind of process is the end which has already been reached by Stalin, the outstanding Conservative Socialist of our times..."

—C. M. Woodhouse in The Nineteenth Century (England) May, 1949.

In his Thoughts on the Constitution, Mr. Amery the British Conservative M.P., remarks: "What we call a change of Government is in fact only a change in the small, if important, element which is required to direct the general policy, while recruiting for it Parliamentary and public support, or at least acquiescence."

The most important aspect of the present political situation in this and every other "democracy," is that "changes in Governments" merely mean changes in arguments to gain public support for a central policy, which, while it may be advanced by different methods, does not change. Terms like "Socialism" and "Capitalism" generally confuse the real issue, which is centralisation of power versus decentralisation of power.

It may be worth while trying to have the non-Labour Parties elected by a small majority at the next Federal Elections, even if only for the purpose of demonstrating to their supporters that, unless prevented, the leaders of these Parties will strive to carry on the policy of centralising now being pursued so vigorously by the Labour Party.

Expediency for Principles

A copy of the Platform and Policy of the Liberal and Country League of Western Australia has come to hand. Under the heading of "Taxation," it is stated that Liberal policy favours the "Re-constitution of the Grant Commission to enable it to make provision for the full economic development of Western Australia." As there is no reference whatever to Uniform Taxation, the above statement presumably means the Western Australian Liberals like Mr. Menzies, favour the retention of Uniform Taxation and the establishment of a Grants Commission which will allocate funds to the States.

Thus the "anti-Socialism;" of Western Australia reveal themselves as true political intriguers, prepared to sacrifice principles for expediency.

Warning By An Economist

In an objective article in the April issue of the Economic News Mr. Colin Clark, one of the few economists of note who is not a totalitarian, after writing of manpower control in Great Britain warns Australians to beware of economic conscription: "We would like to believe that no sensible Australian ever had the idea of imposing industrial conscription, but unfortunately the facts point to the opposite conclusion. There has been too much kite flying, some of it from elevated quarters, for us to feel easy on this score.

"Dr. Lloyd Ross, the holder of a high position in the Commonwealth Department of Post-War Reconstruction, in an address before the Institute of Engineers . . . said that, after the war, manpower control should be used to secure industrial discipline.

"The anxiety of the Commonwealth to establish a complete network of labour exchanges throughout Australia requires some explanation; it has been admitted that the Commonwealth Department of Labour and National Service is watching the development of industrial conscription in Britain with considerable interest.

"A significant kite was flown recently by Mr. McAlpine, on the necessity of manpower control . . . for the preservation of full employment. Still more surprising was the subsequent statement to the same effect by Mr. Bellemore, Under Secretary for Labour and Industry in New South Wales."

Any Government, irrespective of its label, which insists upon a policy of "full employment," must inevitably impose manpower controls eventually. All anti-Socialists should face up to this fundamental issue.

Nationalisation

I have in a previous letter made reference to the nationalisation of industries pointing out that during the first year of the nationalisation of coal mines in Great Britain the loss was 20 million sterling. We are now informed that the loss on the British railways last year amounted to 25 million pounds. We are not told why under national ownership dividends were paid but under national ownership there is a loss, and a very big one too. The same thing has happened in Australia. With private enterprise the customer is given every consideration, but with a nationalised industry the customer's convenience is relegated to the background.

To say that an industry when it is nationalised becomes the property of the people and is under their control is a quibble and a fiction. No such thing takes place or is intended to happen. What transpires is the transference of the industry from owners (whose business it is amongst other things to ascertain the needs of the customer or clients, and to the best of their ability provide them with what the require) to bureaucrats who have no incentive to make an industry pay its way and who are out of touch with the requirements of the people for whose benefit the industry is supposed to exist.

Private enterprise with its capitalists has not been altogether free of blemishes, but State socialism or nationalisation with its bureaucrats possesses very dangerous possibilities. The bureaucrats will bring it home to the general public that they and not the community are the real controllers of the industries which the public has been led to believe it possesses and which realises at last that it has been hoodwinked by politicians whose main object was to secure votes in exchange for illusory promises. Instead of the Promised Land the people are led to the edge of a desert interspersed with bitter lakes.

Annual Dinner

AN EXCELLENT EVENING

Close on 100 guests were present at the Banquet Hall, Victoria Palace, Melbourne, on July 14th, on the occasion of the Third Annual Dinner of the "New Times," which proved a most enjoyable function.

It was regrettable that some of our country supporters, who had promised to come, were prevented by transport restrictions, but a number from Geelong, Red Hill Wangaratta, Warracknabeal, Lockington and Camperdown managed the trip. We were especially glad to have with us Capt. McCormick, from Scotland, who was paying a brief visit to this country.

Mr. Carruthers, Chairman of the company, who presided, welcomed the guests. He said he was privileged to read out the following personal message from Major C. H. Douglas, which had been sent to Mr. Eric Butler to be conveyed to the Social Crediters of Victoria:

The opportunity which your "New Times" Dinner affords enables me to perform two services to your fellow Social Crediters in the British Isles. The first is to convey the sense of gratitude all of us feel, not only for the kindness, but perhaps even more for the comprehension, which has prompted the despatch of so many gift parcels. It is difficult to convey to anyone who has not lived in these islands in the nineteenth century, the appalling degradation, which has fallen on us, only mitigated by the sympathy of our kinsmen overseas.

And the second service I must attempt is to impart the conviction which an increasing number, not all Social Crediters alone, hold, that we are the victims of a deliberate plan to eliminate British ideals.

With you, and people like you, lies perhaps the greatest responsibility ever laid on any group to justify the continued existence of this planet. If you fail (but you will not fail) the human race has no visible prospects of survival.

The King

He then called on Mr. Bruce Brown, well-known lecturer and contributor to the New Times, to propose the health of The King. Mr. Brown said it was not customary to do more than stand when the toast was proposed and drink His Majesty's health, but he felt that in such a gathering as this, we should take time to consider the important part, which the King and the Royal Family played in this Empire of ours. We should try to understand the basis of our loyalty to the Crown, which was so necessary to the maintenance of the British way of life.

Major Douglas

The toast to Major Douglas was proposed by Mr. John Weller, who said he was very conscious of the honour it was to give this toast. He outlined briefly the early history of Major Douglas, and spoke of his remarkable career. He said Major Douglas wrote his first book, Economic Democracy, in 1918, and the principles he outlined in that book were as sound today as when they were written.

Mr. Weller paid tribute to Major Douglas, as one who possessed the greatest mind in the twentieth century. Although, he said, he was completely unknown to the masses of the people today, his was a name which would be honoured in the years to come. His unfailing ability to forecast major political events proved conclusively the measure of his genius. In thirty years, in spite of the tremendous entrenched opposition which was organised against him and his ideas, this one great man had inspired a movement which is active in most parts of the world, and which continues to increase in strength from year to year.

"The New Times"

Mr. Carruthers then introduced Mr. J. T. Smith, one of the early pioneers of the Social Credit movement in Australia, to propose the toast to the New Times. Mr. Smith emphasised that the policy of uncovering and exposing the real enemies of our Christian civilisation, as laid down by Douglas, was being continuously carried out in the paper. This was an extremely difficult task and he was glad to see so many of the younger generation present, who possessed the great advantage

"THE SOCIAL CREDITER" COMMENTS ON THE "ARGUS"

We learn from the Press of June 27 that the Daily Mirror Newspapers, Ltd., of London, which has been widely credited with being under the control of Mr. Israel Moses Sieff, has purchased a large block of shares in The Argus and Australasian Ltd., the owners of the Melbourne Argus.

The Argus is one of the most influential papers in Australia, and has recently been giving wide publicity to the political and economic views of the best type of Australian Social Crediters and publishing articles by Mr. Eric Butler. Obviously, this must be stopped.

— The Social Crediter, July 9.

It has been stopped.

The importance of this comment lies in the fact that The Social Crediter had no knowledge of what was actually taking place in regard to Argus policy. The test of true analysis lies in correct prophecy.

This, at least, explains one important reason why almost double the market price was paid for the shares.

of a Social Credit background, and to note their keenness and enthusiasm for the work still to be done. He congratulated the Chairman and Board on their success in pulling the paper through a most difficult time and wished them all success in the future.

The toast was ably seconded by Mr. John Johnstone, who paid tribute to the founder of the paper, the late Tom Moore, and his successor, Mr. Hal Allsop, who edited and kept the paper going during the difficult war years. The post-war years had brought financial trouble, and he thought the present editor, Mr. Carruthers, and the contributors, who were all working voluntarily, had done a magnificent job.

Chairman's Response

Mr. Carruthers, in responding on behalf of the Board, said that, with the help of donations from generous supporters, and severe retrenchments in expenditure, which had been made possible only by the splendid co-operation of a number of voluntary workers, he was able to announce that the paper was at last meeting its commitments. He regretted the reduction to eight pages, but said it would be impossible to increase the size unless the circulation was considerably greater, and he urged all present to work to that end. He did stress, however, that the paper was being read today by a very important section of the community which included many people in key positions, and because of this he thought it was exerting a greater influence on events than many would have thought possible. The company was then entertained by Mr. Purdy, who sang splendidly, and by Mr. Peter Leonard, who gave us excellent character sketches and a most amusing puppet show.

Mr. E. D. Butler

Mr. Eric Butler gave a most inspiring address, which dealt with the impact which was being made on the business community, - not only in Melbourne, but in the country district in Victoria. He demonstrated how the prestige of Social Crediters had been slowly built up over the past few years, and as a result there is today a greater awareness of the real dangers of Socialism and the monopoly state. Mr. Butler said he had frequently been invited to address bodies of businessmen, who had been astonished at the information he was able to give them. As a result he had prepared brochures on Free Enterprise, Constitutional Barriers to Serfdom, and other similar fundamentals matters which had been widely distributed all over Australia. His articles in the Melbourne Argus had attracted considerable attention all over the State. These had now been stopped since the London Socialist Daily Mirror group had assumed control of the editorial policy, but he hoped that his articles would appear shortly in a number of country newspapers.

Following a public meeting held in the Town Hall, Melbourne, to expose the "Free" medicine scheme, Mr. Butler said he had been invited to address meetings of the medical and dental professions, and had also met many of them informally. The brochure, which he had prepared entitled The Real Policy Behind Free Medicine, had been distributed all over Australia.

THE COMMUNIST THREAT IN THE NORTH

Although we have no desire to adopt a "We-told-you-so" attitude about the Chinese situation, we do desire to stress the fact that what we have been consistently saying for some time past about the menace of Communism in China, is now being more generally recognised. In an editorial in its issue of July 21, the Melbourne "Age" faces up to the issue in a manner, which we wish other dailies would emulate.

The "Age" states: "Happenings in China as the Communists tighten their grip discount heavily the earlier consoling notion that they would so arrange matters as to permit business as usual' for Europeans and Americans . . . Unless some wholly unexpected development were to occur in the near future, there seems to be no real obstacle to the Communists penetrating the areas south of the Yangtse still under Nationalist control. The scene unfolding points more strongly than before to the conclusion that Communist China will be closely associated with Soviet Russia. It may be true, as Dr. Evatt warned, that there are dangers in dogmatising about China. But the evidences grow that the new regime, far from having any friendly feelings for Westerners, is actuated by a bitter hostility to British, American and European 'imperialists.' The inference from Communist broadcasts is that the new rulers want China (if it is not already) a close ally and co-partner of Russia."

The "Age" then goes on to say that the U.S.A. State Department has evidence that the Chinese Communists are totalitarians operating under the direct control of Moscow. As it is now obvious that the Chinese Communists are an important element in the international Communist conspiracy, and not just "agrarian reformers" with a nation-alist background, as Professor Copland has contended, it can be anticipated that the Communist victory in China will result in a drive south into Indo-China and all territories to the North of Australia. This matter is of the most vital importance to Australia. Our survival depends upon a recognition of this fact.

But it is also essential that it be clearly recognised that the Communist menace in China and the Near North has been deliberately brought about by long-range policies. In order to understand these policies, it is essential to go back at least to the war years, when President Roosevelt, dominated by powerful Zionist groups in the U.S.A., entered into secret arrangements with Stalin which made the post-war Communist successes in Eastern Europe and China possible. In his astounding book of revelations, "The Roosevelt Myth," the American writer, John T. Flynn, exposes how Roosevelt tried to compel Chiang Kai-Shek from fighting the Chinese Communists. American foreign policy — i.e., Zionist policy — was directly responsible for the Communist victories in China. This is an indisputable fact.

However, in trying to "explain" the facts, it is now a common practice by some apologists to say that the disastrous policies pursued by Roosevelt were merely "honest mistakes." But this theory is not very convincing when it is seen that every "mistake" created the conditions, which the Zionist plotters can exploit to centralise power still further. These plotters seek to establish a World Government, which they will dominate. The threat of Communism in the North will be used to try and persuade Australians to accept more centralised control, both nationally and internationally, in order to meet the threat. This is the technique of the blackmailer and must be recognised as such if we are to survive. Needless to say, we do not expect any daily newspaper to draw attention to this aspect of the Communist menace!

There is no doubt, he said, that during the past six months a tremendous amount of work has been done, and the tempo is increasing as the general election approaches. Success is crowning our efforts and readers of the New Times will be glad to know that the principles enunciated by Major Douglas are getting greater publicity today than ever before in Australia, and they are being well received in the most unlikely quarters.

The Voluntary Workers

Proposing the Toast to the Voluntary Workers, Mr. R. H. Weller said they were playing a very important part, and without them it would have been impossible to keep the paper in circulation. Among those who gave up their time to routine work were the following: Mrs. W. G. a'Beckett, Miss Birrell, Mrs. M. Cuming, Miss M. Fahey, Miss R. Stephens, Mr. A. Stephens, Mr. H. Gerrand, Mr. G. Hughes, Mr. R. McDonald, Mr. W. Eager, Mr. W. McCombie, and Mr. N. White. He felt sure that all readers of the New Times would wish to assist in whatever way was possible, and suggested that increasing the circulation of the paper to more people occupying important positions in local and national government would be an admirable way.

Mrs. a'Beckett responded in her usual delightful style by affirming that they were only too glad to do what they could, as they considered the dispatch of the paper was of paramount importance. She knew she could speak for them all when she said they would continue as long as it was necessary.

The Ladies

The last toast of the evening was to the Ladies, which was given in his inimitable manner by Mr. N. White, and was most ably responded to by Miss M. Fahey, who said that it was vitally important in these days for the women of society to play their part in understanding the political situation, and to help the fight against the complete enslavement of the individual which was being brought nearer and nearer.

Mr. Brian Fitzgerald accompanied splendidly during the evening, and played selections before dinner and during the interval. All present would wish to say thank you to the management and staff of the Victoria Palace for the excellent dinner and the general arrangements.

FACTS ABOUT PETROL

Rationing of petrol has long been abandoned in South Africa, Canada, Belgium, France, Holland, Norway, Denmark and Sweden.

There is a surplus of sterling petrol, and a surplus of sterling tankers. In 1948 the sterling area oil surplus was 19 million tons.

A greatly increased sterling area output is issued for 1949.

The Jew Speaks

We are indebted to Mr. O. E. Edstrom, of San Francisco, California, for the following collection of outstanding quotations by Jews and Jewish Journals. The quotations speak for themselves.

"The patriotism of the Jew is simply a cloak he assumes to please the Englishman. Jews who pretend that they can at once be patriotic Englishmen and good Jews are simply living lies."

— B. Feliz

"Let us take the mask off. Let us play the Lion of Judah for a change. Away with false patriotism. A Jew can only recognise one Fatherland — Palestine."

— M. J. Wodislowski, Jewish World.

"We are, whether born here or naturalised here, not really British at all. We are National Jews — by race and faith — and not Englishmen."

— Zionist

"The general causes of anti-Semitism have always been the fault of the Jews themselves and not the fault of those who have opposed them . . . With his disposition and his tendencies it is inevitable that the Jew plays a part in revolutions."

— Bernard Lazare.

"What Jewish idealism and Jewish discontent have so powerfully contributed to accomplish in Russia, the same historic qualities of the Jewish mind and heart are tending to promote in other countries."

— The American Hebrew.

"We, the Jews, are a people — One people . . . When we sink, we become revolutionary proletariat, the subordinate officers of a revolutionary party; when we rise, there rises also our terrible power of the purse."

— Theodore Herzl.

"Let us recognise that we Jews are a distinct nationality of which every Jew, whatever his country, his station, or shade of belief, is necessarily a member. Organise, organise, until every Jew must stand up and be counted — counted with us, or prove himself wittingly, or unwittingly, of the few who are against their own people."

— Louis B. Brandeis.

"We Jews, who have posed as Saviors of the World, we are today nothing else but the World's seducers, its destroyers, its incendiaries, its executioners."

— Oscar Levy.

"I am not an American citizen of Jewish faith. I am a Jew. I have been an American for sixty-three years, but I have been a Jew for 4,000 years. Hitler was right in one thing. He calls the Jewish people a race, and we are a race."

— Rabbi Stephen S. Wise.

"Every time you blow up a British arsenal, or wreck a British jail, or send a British railroad train sky high, or rob a British bank or let go with your guns and bombs at the British betrayers and invaders of your homeland, the Jews of America make a little holiday in their hearts."

— Ben Hecht, in a letter "To the Terrorists of Palestine."

"Nineteen hundred years ago you (Gentiles) were an innocent, carefree pagan race. You worshipped countless gods . . . You took unblushing pride in glory of your naked bodies. . . . But we did not let you alone . . . We conquered you as no empire of yours ever subjugated Africa or Asia . . . We did it solely by the irresistible might of our spirit, with ideas, with propaganda."

"Our tribal customs have become the core of your moral code. We have been at the bottom not merely of the latest great war but of nearly all your wars, not only the Russian but of every other major revolution in your history. We have brought discord and confusion and frustration into your personal and public life. No one can tell how long we shall go on doing it . . . We still dominate you. At this moment your churches are torn asunder by civil war between Fundamentalists and Modernists."

— Marcus Eli.

"The Jews have lost faith in the Gentile World. They do not want any part of it. Most of the 600,000 Jews in Palestine have close relatives in Europe and desire their immediate removal to Palestine."

— Dafni Rubin.

"The fact that Von Papen and Frietsche were acquitted should not obscure the fact that the - infinitely greater criminals who were directly responsible for the extermination of the European Jews, such as Julius Streicher, the very symbol of filthy Nazi anti-Semitism, was sentenced to death only because of his anti-Semitism. The plain facts of the trial at Nuremberg are that it was the first public and official demonstration to the Christian world against anti-Semitism."

— American Hebrew.

"Christ should have been ground up and fed to dogs. Then he would not be a martyr today."

— Ben Hecht.

"The second World War is being fought for the defence of the fundamentals of Judaism."

— Chicago Jewish Sentinel.

"We have been at war with him (Hitler) from the first day that he gained power."

— The Jewish Chronicle.

"Hitler will have no war, but he will be forced to it, not this year, but later on."

— Emil Ludwig.

"The Sanhedrin produced World Destruction in which it was in accordance with the plan outlined in the Protocols that both revolutions (1905 and 1917) occurred in Russia; that we have had two World Wars."

— H. H. Klein.

"The Jew is not satisfied with de-Christianising. He Judaizes, he destroys Protestant, or Catholic faith, he provokes indifference but he imposes his idea of the world, of morals and of life upon those whose faith he ruins; he works at his age-old task, the annihilation of the religion of Christ."

— Bernard Lazare.

"The international must take the position that if another war occurs the workers will destroy capitalism. With that end in view the workers must be prepared to stretch arms across the frontiers in case of war and definitely win power for themselves."

— David J. Saposs.

"Should war be forced upon us and we see the old, ugly, imperialistic aims dominating the rulers of the Democracies, we of the Labour Party and the working class everywhere see it as our duty to turn those wars into civil wars and remake those governments which disregard the working classes which are their foundations."

"Then will the mob exalt us and bear us up in their hands in a unanimous triumph of hopes and expectations."

"Voting . . . will then have served its part for the last time by unanimity of desire to make close acquaintance with us before condemning us."

"To secure this we must have everybody vote without distinction of classes and qualifications, in order to establish an absolute majority which cannot be got from the educated propertied classes. In this way, by inculcating in all a sense of self-importance, we shall destroy among the Goyim the importance of the family."

— Zionist Statement.

"By all these means we shall so wear down the goyim that they will be compelled to offer us international power of a nature that by its position will enable us without violence gradually to absorb all the State forces of the world and to form a super-Government. In place of the rules of today we shall set up a bogey, which will be called the Super-Government Administration. Its hand will reach out in all directions like nippers and its dimensions will be of such colossal dimensions that it cannot fail to subdue all the nations of the world."

— Protocol 5.

"The fact that it was Jewish help that brought the U.S.A. into war (World War I) on the side of the Allies has rankled ever since in German — especially Nazi — minds, and has contributed in no small measure to the prominence which anti-Semitism occupies in the Nazi Programme."

— Samuel Landman.

"We are interested in the diminution, the killing out of the goyim. Our power is in the chronic shortness of food and physical weakness of the working classes because by all that this implies he is made the slave of our will, and he will not find in his own authorities either strength or energy to set against our will. Hunger creates the right of capital to rule the worker more surely than it was given to the aristocracy by the legal authority of kings. By want and the envy and hatred, which it engenders, we shall move the mobs, and with our hands we shall wipe out all those who hinder us on our way."

Landowners' Reafforestation Movement

Notes of talk given by Mr. C. E. Isaac, M.L.C., Hon. Director, "Save the Forests Campaign," to the Victorian Compost Society.

For more than a hundred years we have been cutting down or ring-barking trees in Australia by the million. We have cleared thousands of square miles of country that should never have been cleared.

In recent years we have done a little replanting, but we count our replanted trees by the thousand and the area replanted by the acre. When we say we are planting hundreds of thousands of trees or thousands of acres the numbers sound impressive, but we need to remind ourselves that it takes a thousand thousand to make a million, and that a million trees at the ordinary rate of forest planting will replant less than 2 1/2 square miles.

During the past eighteen months I have travelled fairly extensively in every State of the Commonwealth, and in every State I have seen large areas of what was once well-wooded country, judging by the stumps and dead trees, now without a single living tree.

Travelling through these treeless farmlands in the heat of summer, seeing the suffering of stock in paddocks that haven't a vestige of shade, seeing the dust rising with every gust of wind, seeing irrigation channels filled with windblown sand, it is hard to understand the short-sightedness of those who grubbed or killed every tree.

Fortunately, many farmers are coming to realise that it is false economy to gain the last blade of grass or grain of wheat at the expense of suffering stock, and soil exposed to the full force of wind erosion.

But the damage has been done. How can it be repaired?

In our forestlands nature helps reafforestation by sowing seed to replace forest trees that are cut down or killed. The seedlings which result will grow into a new forest if the foresters, helped by public co-operation, can protect them from fire, grazing stock and rabbits.

On cleared farm land the position is different. Nature cannot help by sowing seed, as the seed-bearing trees have been cut down or ring-barked. Young trees must be raised in nurseries and planted out where they are needed. "Well," you may say, "that should be easy: let the Government supply more trees."

I wonder how many people have any idea of the magnitude of the work involved in replanting land that has been wrongly denuded of trees.

In Victoria, about two-thirds of the land is now clear, or nearly clear, of trees. To replant one percent of that cleared land, at the usual plantation spacing of eight feet apart, would take over two hundred million trees. Think of it! To put just one acre of trees in every hundred acres that is at present growing farm crops or grass, in this one small State, would take over two hundred million trees. This statement may be hard to credit, but you can check it quite easily and you will find it correct. What would it take to replant one percent of the cleared land of New South Wales or Queensland? If you reckon at half the usual forest planting, the total will still be hundreds of millions.

What we are doing at present in replanting alienated land is almost negligible. We are making no headway at all. Over Australia we are certainly going back in the proportion of timber on private land, although we are gaining in most States in public appreciation of the seriousness of the position.

Throughout Australia a complete change of outlook towards re-afforestation is urgently needed. Where we have been thinking in thousands we must commence to think in millions, and I believe that the task of growing and distributing the hundreds of millions of trees required is quite beyond the capacity of any government.

What, then, is the solution? In my opinion, the solution is very simple, very inexpensive and entirely practicable. All that is needed is to make the raising of trees for the farm a regular part of the farm routine.

In Victoria there are 70,000 occupiers of the 56,000 square miles of cultivated and grassland. If only a tenth of these occupiers, with average-sized holdings, grew enough trees to plant one acre in every hundred acres of their properties, the total would be twenty million trees. That would be a good start.

The raising of trees from seed would be found surprisingly easy and inexpensive, and the trees would be on hand, without the delay and heavy cost of transport, just when it was convenient to the farmer to plant them.

Advice on raising trees is available from the Forests Department, the "Save the Forests" Campaign, and many weekly journals. It should not be difficult to establish demonstration nurseries and plantations, where field days of instruction could be held, on the farms of the more enthusiastic growers.

A commencement has already been made on these lines in Victoria, where the "Save the Forests" Campaign in 1948 helped eighty-six Returned Soldier Settlers to start demonstration plantations on their farms. The number will be increased to 200 during 1949, and the work will be continued until there is a demonstration plantation and farm tree-nursery in every district. The Soldier Settlement Commission, the Department of Agriculture, the Forests Commission and the Treasury Department are all helping in this movement.

If you wish to plant trees on your own property, and have not already had experience in raising trees, you will want to know how to make a start. Your first problem will be to obtain seed, and I suggest that you start, right away, to save your own seed, as the best time for saving seed is during the next two or three months. Most of our trees flower in the spring and ripen their seed during the summer. The best time for sowing seed is from September to November. Save seed in the summer; sow in the spring.

I have only time to describe very briefly a simple method of saving one type of seed, so I shall deal with our most valuable tree family, the Eucalypt.

The seed, which may be as fine as a grain of sand, or more than a quarter of an inch in length, is contained in capsules which vary in colour from green to red, and in size from as small as a sweet pea to as large as a hen egg. The capsules most familiar to you will, most probably, be the small, oval capsules of the Sugar Gum, and the large "gum nuts" of the Scarlet Flowering Gum. Some seed can be reached from the ground; in other cases it may be necessary to climb the tree or use a ladder.

Let us suppose you are able to save seed of the Sugar Gum. Gather a few handfuls of the capsules — or more if desired — taking those that are dark green or bronze green in colour. Seed in the shiny, light green capsules may not yet be ripe, while the hard, grey capsules may have shed their seed. Spread the capsules on a sheet of paper or in a box, such as a cardboard boot box, and put them in a dry, warm place, preferably where the sun can shine on them through glass. Within a week or two in warm, sunny weather, little valves in the end of the capsules will open and, if the box or paper is shaken, the seed will come out. When most of the capsules are open, collect the seed by putting it through a sieve, which will hold back the capsules.

The seed is best kept in calico bags, as the cloth helps the seed to dry out, but paper packets or envelopes will do almost as well. If seed which is not thoroughly

How Money Destroys Native Races

By HUGH E. SEATON

A scathing indictment of the "civilizing" influence of Western Democracy on primitive peoples which appeared in "Trees," the English Quarterly, Spring, 1949.

In a recent broadcast a traveller told how Indians of that region of cold blasts, Tierra de Fuego, lived without clothes; how their women dived in the icy sea to get their food of shellfish and sea-creatures. By no means a softy himself, he described these people as wretched. What a travesty of truth; and how typical of modern decadent thought. Not even an early Victorian would have done other than admire their hardiness; and certainly no Elizabethan would have pitied these people who live like seals, an example of perfect fitness and toughness. Our travellers threw them some white loaves, which they devoured voraciously; what a symbol of the White Man's unconscious wickedness — a gift to perfectly fed healthy supremely tough people of that very archetype of evil, denatured food, which has dulled and devitalised the whole western world. Over and over again this has been accidentally proved. A shipload of white flour and sugar within a year softened the teeth of Tristan da Cunha people who had never previously had any tooth trouble. Ships calling at isolated islands with these products cause annual ill health to the inhabitants. Animals and humans take the line of least resistance. Any creature will take to alcohol. Rats will ravenously drink that dissolver of bones and body, sweet tea, and become neurotic and full of townsman's diseases. Hence the immense importance of sound disciplined tradition in holding a race to the narrow way of health, hardiness, and lively vitality.

dry is stored in closed bottles or tins, it may start to germinate or become mouldy. As a final word of caution — mice are fond of many kinds of seed. Many other native and introduced trees seed freely and are easily raised from seed. Once you have made a start your own ingenuity will help, you in dealing with unusual seeds.

Australia is suffering from great and often unnecessary destruction of her trees. If you own land, will you join in an Australia-wide people's re-forestation movement, by saving your own tree seed and raising and planting Australian native trees as windbreaks, woodlots, shade for stock, or the protection and beautification of your home? There are few things you can do that will be of greater benefit to yourself, to your district, and, collectively, to the nation.

Money

How does Money come in here? Money, by making it easy to get non-traditional foods, destroys the foundation of local health and vigour. It is generally believed that Native Races are destroyed because they are not immune to the White Man's diseases such as Measles and Tuberculosis. There is something in this, but far the greatest factor is the alteration in their sound food habits. No one now needs telling that Tuberculosis is a food-shortage disease — in other words a deficiency disease in the broad sense; starving Europe has shown that. The same applies to most diseases in their final effect — though possibly when newly introduced they may wipe out a portion of the population. Before we believe this we have much more to learn about complete immunity based on complete feeding. Take the Indians of Alaska. These people, once tough, virile and magnificent, their chiefs living beyond 100 years; are now eaten up by disease; tuberculosis in their teens, with black decayed teeth in childhood, an expectation of life averaging around 30 years. Pushed off their hunting grounds, altered in their habits, paid money for the skins they trap, and allowed to get drunk by whole families. The money, even a little of it, is an absolute curse. It is much easier to buy the cursed white flour and sugar than to hunt for food." The whole system degenerates, and hardiness and health depart. Taught to wash by foolish missionaries they distribute syphilitic sores over the whole family via the dirty towel. A white woman touring the country by canoe was unable to wash for a large part of a year. Result, her hair became naturally oiled and luxuriant, and her hairdresser complimented her on the absence of dandruff previously a nuisance. We have a lot to learn about real Hygiene. We are grossly ignorant about real inner cleanliness, which sweetens the body from marrow to skin.

Natural Foods

The Western Esquimaux, who migrated to Alaska to avoid debt to a white trader, retain their health better than the Coast Siwash Indians and the Interior Indians. They are a highly cultured race, with complex traditions and a language having more words than ours. They are not so easily deceived as the simpler Indian. Among their foods is a kind of Salmon Cheese made by placing salmon in the cold soil of a riverbank and leaving it to a process of decay for a whole year. After this the whole fish can be eaten, a very special dainty. Such local fermented foods are far more natural and healthy, far less costly, than the terrible dead concoctions advertised on our hoardings as health foods by large commercial companies whose "educated" ignorance of the facts of life and nutrition is appalling to those of us conversant both with traditional good feeding and the latest research. It is truly wicked to cook eggs to death and serve as health food. It is similarly wicked to bake cereals to death and serve as a health food. The Swiss know better. They eat their porridge raw, chew it and enjoy its exquisite live flavour. Such is the curse of large-scale trade, of centralisation of supplies. We pay far more for dead rubbish than the real homemade article would cost. Alaska Indians are rotten with the "bovine type" of tuberculosis, which actually they cannot catch from cows, as there are no cows there. The only milk they can get is sterilised tinned milk. This makes us ask is the "bovine tuberculosis" so often fatal to English young children really bovine at all? — and is the fresh milk scare all bunkum? So here we have the results of the white man's boasted trade and mass production. Here we see the terrible destruction of local culture, local individuality, local nobility, and local interest; a murder of true humanity. Surely we must realise that the only sound life is based on the limited Region, on the local valley, self-supporting and independent.

IS DIGGING NECESSARY?

This important booklet must be in the hands of every organic farmer and gardener. The author, one of England's most famous gardeners, has proved over a long period that better and healthier vegetables can be grown without digging. He outlines the methods he has used.

Mr. King also demonstrates how weeds can be effectively controlled to assist in building soil fertility.

Is Digging Necessary? Contains an excellent section on compost making, and a complete list of literature dealing with soil fertility as the basis of high-level health in plant, animal and man.

Fundamentals

"The civilised nations — Greece, Rome, England — have been sustained by the primitive forests which anciently rotted where they stood. They survive as long as the soil is not exhausted."

— Thoreau, Walking and the Wild. "The staple foods may not contain the same nutritive substances as in former times. Chemical fertilisers, by increasing the abundance of crops without replacing all the exhausted elements of the soil, have indirectly contributed to change the nutritive value of cereal grains and of vegetables. . . Hygienists have not paid sufficient attention to the genesis of diseases. Their studies of conditions of life and diet, and their effects on the physiological and mental state of modern man, are superficial, incomplete, and of too short duration. They have, thus, contributed to the weakening of our body and soul."

— Alexis Carrel, Man the Unknown.

"The preservation of fertility is the first duty of all that live by the land. . . There is only one rule of good husbandry — leave the land far better than you found it."

— George Henderson, The Farming Ladder.

"The man in the street will have to do three things: —

"1. He must create in his own farm, garden or allotment, examples without end of what a fertile soil can do.

"2. He must insist that the public meals in which he is directly interested, such as those served in boarding schools, in the canteens of day schools and of factories, in popular restaurants and tea shops, and at the seaside resorts at which he takes his holidays are composed of the fresh produce of fertile soil.

"3. He must use his vote to compel his various representatives — municipal, county and parliamentary — to see to it: (a) that the soil of this island is made fertile and maintained in this condition; (b) that the public health system of the future is based on the fresh produce of land in good heart."

— Sir Albert Howard, Farming and Gardening for Health or Disease.

THE CLUE TO COMMUNISM

To understand the full meaning of Communism it is essential to follow the matter from the start and to understand who it is who put the Communists into Russia and who supports them there.

It is well known that funds required for bringing about the Bolshevik revolution were, to a considerable extent, provided by Jewish Wall Street bankers, and to quote once more the words of Sir William J. Oudendyk in his report to the British Government in September 1918 —

"If an end is not put to Bolshevism in Russia at once the civilisation of the whole world will be threatened. . . I consider that the immediate suppression of Bolshevism is the greatest issue now before the world. . . and unless Bolshevism is nipped in the bud immediately it is bound to spread in one form or another all over Europe and the whole world, as it is organised and worked by Jews who have no nationality.

Sir William Oudendyk was Dutch Ambassador to Russia during the Revolution and took care of our interests after our representative, Capt. Cromie, had been foully murdered by the Bolsheviks on the steps of the British Embassy. It will be recalled that Sir William Oudendyk's report, issued as a British White Paper, was almost immediately suppressed and a new edition brought out which entirely omitted the reference to Jewish participation in the Revolution, and thus avoided giving the essential clue to the riddle of Communism. — The Patriot, Eng., June 1949.
