ADVANCING TO SLAVERY UNDER THE THREAT OF WAR

The Fabian Marxist organisation, Political and Economic Planning (P.E.P.), made the highly significant statement on the eve of the Second World War, that only in war or "the threat of war", would the British people accept the type of central planning envisaged by P.E.P. — P.E.P. Chairman Israel Moses Sieff referred with warm approval the type of planning being imposed in the Soviet Union.

Now military war is not the only type of war. Both the world wars of this century were preceded by trade wars. At present the headlines warn of a major inter-nation trade war. A senior Japanese Minister has suggested that another military war is essential to halt the trade war. But the central planners everywhere are busy preaching the doctrine that more planning of the individual is essential to avoid more disasters. And that "international action" is necessary to end the growing trade friction.

The story is told of the man who upon attending his old University observed to a lecturer, "I see by your examination papers that you are still asking the same old questions. Nothing seems to have changed." To which the lecturer replied, "You are wrong. We are still asking the same questions but now have different answers." Not only do the "experts" change the answers: they also create new examples of jargon to disguise the fact that they have no real answers to the mounting problems of a misdirected economic system. We are now told that the economists of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) have moved away from their limited "locomotive" theory of world economic recovery, under which West Germany and Japan were supposed to generate a "wider upturn" by expanding their domestic demand and imports. A new recovery strategy has been advanced, a "concerted" plan called the "convey" theory!

Under the "convey" theory, all members of the OECD are supposed to adopt expansionary policies. In this way they will allegedly all be able to export and import more. Such policies can only intensify the problems now bedeviling the Free World. British Prime Minister Callaghan warns that unless expansionary policies are adopted, the major trading nations could soon start slamming their doors against one another. He urges that Americans to give a lead. President Carter realises that under present financial rules such expansion must result in further domestic inflation. America has been shaken by a disastrous coal strike, the type of mounting industrial explosion which is affecting every industrialised nation as wage earners resort to direct action in an attempt to gain increased wages. Increased wages give the wage earner a short-term benefit, which is soon wiped out by further inflation.

The organisation of the Common Market was justified on the grounds that the Western European nations had to form a bigger economic unit to compete with the United States. But while the Common Market countries have come under criticism because of their restrictions on the exports of other countries, they are complaining about the Japanese doing the same! British Chancellor of the Exchequer Healey is bitter about the Japanese who "feel they can import from nobody and export to everybody". He wants "tough" action against the Japanese. But Prime Minister Fraser of Australia wants "tough" action against the Common Market nations. He insists that they must take more Australian production — the same type of production of which the Common Market countries have surpluses. At the same time Australia's South-East Asian neighbours are complaining about Australia's restrictive tariff policies. Prime Minister Muldoon of New Zealand has threatened to ban Japanese fishing fleets from its 200-mile economic zone unless Japan agrees to take more New Zealand farm products.

PIN-POINTING THE PROBLEM

Unwittingly Mr. Muldoon has pinpointed the nature of the problem affecting all nations. He complains about the fluctuating nature and uncertainty of the Japanese market for primary production. "You can't build a farming industry on an uncertain market," he said. The only market over which any nation has control is its own market. The "favourable balance of trade" doctrine is based upon a dangerous myth: that a nation becomes wealthier if it can export more than its imports. As the industrialised nations, these now including countries like South Korea and Taiwan, improve their production techniques, they are progressively producing more while distributing less purchasing power in wages and salaries. The desperate export drives are a futile attempt to solve an unsolvable problem. The Free World is coming to the end of the road. Internal convulsions must intensify. Friction between nations must increase. Confucius was right when he said it is no use running harder if you are on the wrong road! Under the threat of increasing war, the International Plotters and Planners, with the International Bankers like the Rockefellers playing a prominent role, are now fostering the idea that there must be a "merging" of the economies of the United States, Japan and the Common Market countries. This is what the Trilaterailists, headed by Mr. David Rockefeller and his associates, are about. They feel that the deepening crisis can be used to force people to surrender more of their control of their own affairs, already severely limited, to the One World Planners. The end result of present finance-economic policies is Monopoly of all power. Such monopoly means slavery similar to that in the Soviet Union. This threat is now no longer a remote possibility; it is now moving closer under the rapidly increasing pressure of events.

The only answer is for one nation for a start to free itself from the insane finance-economic policies, which have produced the deepening international crisis. The first nation, which puts its own internal affairs in order, adjusting its financial policies so that consumption is geared to production, thus ensuring that true national surpluses are used only to pay for necessary imports, will save itself by its own exertions, and Civilisation by its example.

IS NEW ZEALAND SLIDING TOWARDS A "KINDLY FASCISM"?

Mr. Jeremy Lee, National Secretary of the Institute of Economic Democracy, sends the following report from New Zealand, where he has been conducting a three-week lecturing tour under the auspices of the New Zealand League of Rights:

Two days before I arrived in New Zealand, a bi-election in the seat of Rangitikei returned the leader of New Zealand's Social Credit party to the seat. There was a swing against the Muldoon National Government, and an even bigger swing against Labor, which has reached an all-time low — exactly as in Australia. Although the five hundred cheering excited party members at the Social Credit League's victory celebrations, hailing their first member in parliament since the days of Doug Cracknell, are convinced that the New Zealand elections at the end of the year will sweep their party to victory, objective examination shows otherwise. Understanding of the need for monetary reform amongst party adherents is shallow, while the understanding of the principles, which C. H. Douglas insisted should precede any changes to the financial system, simply does not exist. All evidence points to the fact that the Social Credit Party in New Zealand is the "bell-wether" catching the deep-seated protest at the Muldoon Government's disastrous performance in the field of finance-economics — a New Zealand equivalent of the Chippocrats in Australia.

The similarity between the Fraser and Muldoon Governments is chilling. This morning's paper quotes from the National Party election manifesto in 1975: "Continued double-figure inflation will destroy the basis of the New Zealand economy and cause untold misery. The fight against increases in the cost of living is the most important single issue in economic management . . ." The current

N.Z. inflation rate is around 15 percent! However, it seems that Muldoon is about to force a reduction in inflation by crippling industry and accelerating unemployment — as Fraser has done in Australia. Yesterday the news that a big and well-established clothing manufacturer and retailer had gone into liquidation, with a possible lay-off of several hundred workers, stunned the people of Christchurch. An emergency meeting of creditors and government officials will decide whether more money can be borrowed to pay off existing debts! This morning one of the major department stores in Timaru, where I spoke last night, is laying off staff in the wake of slow retail sales. I could well be back in Australia!

LEGACIES

Occasionally the Social Credit cause has been assisted by moderate legacies left by supporters. As foreseen by the founder of the Social Credit movement, C. H. Douglas, the battle to change the course of history was going to be a long one. Dedication of a high order would be required. Social Credit is a unique movement, stressing the importance of the heritage principle. It has, thanks to its pioneers, become firmly established in the stream of history. Those who wish to help make it possible for the continuation and development of the movement may care to ensure that The Australian League of Rights, 273 Little Collins Street, Melbourne, be mentioned in their wills.

The fact that New Zealand does not have an Upper House or a written Constitution has allowed the party in power a latitude which would even shock Australians, accustomed as they might be to the excesses of government. The New Zealand Listener (25/2/78) carried a timely warning from a nationally respected jurist. Sir Guy Powles who was also the ombudsman for a period. Drawing attention to the unrestricted growth of bureaucratic power in coalition with the parts of the day. Sir Guy said: "In such a situation we are sliding slowly but remorselessly from a constitutional position of legal control to one of administrative control. A recent authority has observed that in Western democracies there is a growing tendency towards a 'kindly fascism'. We may be travelling this road here, but of course, fascism is never really 'kindly' . . . The outlook, therefore, for the common ordinary individual citizen in New Zealand is grim. Our grandchildren's great worries may not be economic, but constitutional and political."

No chances, however, are being taken with the upswing of the Social Credit party. The real powers that be well understand that the idealism of youth, even within the sphere of party politics, could well consider it worthwhile to find out what Social Credit's founder, C. H. Douglas, really did say. The New Zealand Truth (31/1/78) contained three pages of venomous smear on Social Credit and particularly on C. H. Douglas reported by a Mr. Tom McLean a former candidate for the Party and one of its ruling clique. The whole tenure of the article was obviously to propagate the idea that the party should sever any connection with the ideas and writings of Douglas. It was claimed whether rightly or wrongly only time can tell — that Bruce Beetham leader of the Party, and the man just elected to the seat of Rangitikei. "has little more than contempt" for the purists who defend the authority with which Douglas spoke.

Recalling R. F. Irvine

THE ONE PROFESSOR OF ECONOMICS WHO ACCEPTED DOUGLAS

In July 1941, died a man who must have possessed, in a rare amalgam, the qualities of insight, the mental energy to break out of the constraining indoctrinations of orthodox economic dogma, and the courage to face the hostility of his academic colleagues, and the Establishment.

He was Professor R. F. Irvine, the pioneer of the Faculty of Economics in the University of Sydney; Professor of Economics from 1912, the first Dean of the Faculty from 1920 until his resignation in 1922.

He was a most able administrator also. In 1907 he organised the examination and internal grade tests in the New South Wales Public Service, as well as modernising Public Service methods. He became Chairman of the Public Service Board of N.S.W. and the N.S.W. Superannuation Board. He made many trips to England and the United States of America to study methods of teaching economics, housing problems, and financial methods. He was a director of the Primary Producers' Bank of Australia Ltd., which pursued a liberal credit policy for farmers and graziers — a policy that brought this Bank into conflict with the older established Trading Banks, and these finally squeezed the Primary Producers' Bank of Australia Ltd. out of existence.

Professor Irvine incurred initial hostility by setting the works of C. H. Douglas for study by his students as part of the Economics course at the University of Sydney in 1921. This caused quite a "flurry" in academic circles at the time — the eventual outcome was the ill health, which led to his resignation.

He later accepted the Economics Chair at the University of Adelaide, but again, a series of his articles on the New Economics brought him into disfavor with Financial Orthodoxy, leading to a further resignation or retirement.

In 1933 the middle of the Great Depression he (privately) published his work, which outlined the New Economic thought The Midas Delusion. Shortly after this period he totally embraced the financial proposals of C. H. Douglas and gave many brilliant addresses from Social Credit platforms. Many articles from his pen were published in The New Era, a Social Credit journal published for many years in Sydney by the late Colin Barclay-Smith, the author of It's Time They Knew, later to be renamed The Money Trick. Professor R. F. Irvine was 80 years of age at the time of his death.

Writing in The Midas Delusion of his days as Professor of Economics at the University of Sydney, he attests to the effect of Douglas's thought on some of his students of the day:

"Before I left, we were discussing with some heat and much diversity of opinion Major Douglas's credit proposals. Some were frankly bored. Others could not for the life of them understand the A plus B, or the Price Regulation theorem or, if they professed to understand, rejected them as unsound, and even nonsensical. A few, even if they could not accept these things, saw in the Douglas diagnosis valuable suggestions for a New Economics, which in truth, a sorely harassed world was in need of. I agree with this point of view, and believe that the intrusion into the economic field of engineers, scientific men, or humanists, pure and simple, is all to the good. It is particularly good for the economist, who at times is apt to claim a too exclusive possession of knowledge, and to magnify over-much his office as 'expert'."

The humility of the true seeker after Truth shines through here: although he was Professor of Economics at the time, he was not fully convinced of the veracity of the Douglas financial proposals. This conviction came a few years later, when his understanding deepened.

Professor Irvine chose not to live "under the tyranny of the dead mind", as, he suggested, most of us do; including academics. Economic thought in the nineteenth century was based on the Theory of Capital Accumulation, and it was held that a society in which wealth is unequally divided was favourable to the increase in Capital Accumulation, and conversely, a more equalitarian society would fail to make the necessary provision for capital increase.

No doubt the general feeling amongst economists of that time was that the entrepreneur class, having risen to financial prominence through natural ability and hard work, would best manipulate capital accumulation: and the reverse was held to be true as the entrepreneur class was diminished and/or destroyed. A young J. M. Keynes propounded that last century — "Europe was so organised socially and economically as to secure maximum financial accumulation".

HENRY FORD GLIMPSED TRUTH

Irvine shows that Henry Ford I was one of the first economic thinkers to see the fallacy of the Theory of Capital Accumulation: indeed before most economists! Ford writes in his Moving Forward: "If however, high wages are not paid, and there is no pressure towards even higher wages as production increases, then the output will not be absorbed, and there will be no reason for producing it. Thus, although industry does not exist to pay high wages, it cannot exist in any large serving capacity unless it does pay high wages." Henry Ford could see back in the twenties, that the gap between purchasing power and production of goods and services was present, and would widen. What would Ford have thought were he alive today, when the wage and salary, themselves, are diminishing factors in modern finance-economics? Automation is the reason. Douglas saw far beyond this stage, to the time when the whole production/employment system would break down because of the ever-widening gap between what is produced in goods and services, and the inability of a population to absorb these by means of the monetary tokens of the time, be they cash or the various credit facilities: Henry Ford just had a glimmer of it.

We must remember that in 1933, the publication year of The Midas Delusion, that the attention of the man in the street was riveted on money — because he was desperately short of it. Not unnaturally, the Social Credit Movement

(in those days sometimes called "Douglas Credit", or "Douglas Social Credit") attracted great numbers of concerned citizens, and inevitably many of these melted away when the Money Power had decided on a renewal of the War which was suspended in 1918 and a policy of re-armament. The world economy "picked up" - magic! Professor Irvine reveals that the economists of that day were no different from those of today, nor has their professional pride lessened. He writes:

"The Douglas Social Credit Movement is making rapid headway in Australia and other countries and can no longer be met by simply ignoring it. The opposition has for some time past been marshalling its forces, led by banks, and bankers' economists. The fight is now on. (The Trading Banks at that time distributed free pamphlets to customers on the "fallacy of Douglas Credit").

"Now whether the Douglas proposal is fallacious or not it is regrettable that some economists, who are presumed to be unfettered in the expression of their opinions, have adopted a 'superior' rather than a scientific attitude towards it. When the first Douglas book appeared in 1919 (Economic Democracy), very few of them paid any attention to it, and still few gave themselves the trouble of studying it with an open mind. The attitude was: 'What should an engineer know about economics?', or 'This book has not even been mentioned in any reputable economic journal'. Fortunately for me some of my senior students induced me to take an interest in the Douglas books. Although I am still in doubt on several points I am glad to take this opportunity of acknowledging that I found in this new school of thought much that was intellectually stimulating and valuable; and I detect in some of the professional economists many traces, though rarely acknowledged, of the Douglas influence." So Professor Irvine's, students really taught him: it is a wise man that is taught by his students!

We have little doubt that future Faculties of Economics at Christian universities in particular will one day educate their students to understand, and apply. Douglas's financial proposals; and furthermore, various other Faculties in the Humanities will throw the searchlight of Social Credit truth on to many of the opinions and theories, traditionally held, to test their veracity.

Professor R. F. Irvine will ultimately find his place in history as the first academic in the discipline of Economics to help advance the Social Credit Movement: and he suffered for it. He was a great man — a humble man: a maligned seeker after Truth.

VIOLETING THE DIVINE PLAN

Extracts from Paper given by Horton Davies at the 1977 National League of Rights Seminar.

Sometimes the term social credit is bandied about as a tag and many think of it as some kind of a money system. In reality what we are about is a spiritual concept, a way of life seeking and committed voluntarily to following out the Divine plan for the whole of life. Once this is grasped and faced up to it makes life a totally new thing. Only as the League of Rights — that is its supporters genuinely seek to live this out — have we any real right to be heard, for nothing else holds any final premise for a sinful, defeated and deceived race.

Great and far-reaching results, good or bad, though they appear complex, are always the result of simple truths, or principles or laws either applied as meant or neglected. The successes or the failures, the healthful results or the diseases are symptoms not causes. They are outgrowths or consequences of a pursuing of or else a departure from the rules of health. Let us remember that health is really a simple thing. It is proper. It is natural. It is automatic if right principles are followed from the start. It is readily lost, and perhaps never fully regainable if neglected for so long that irreversible damage is caused, e.g. heart disease or cancer.

This has so far been a wonderful and terrible century. Wonderful because we have discovered, fallen across or developed so many previously unheard of avenues for comfort, enjoyment and leisure. Yet it has been a terrible one because we have assumed and acted as though we have the right even as very temporary residents to use up the resources of the whole world as wastefully as we choose and not really care about the future supply of essentials for our children and grand-children to follow us.

Worse still, we have seen the fruits and the control of our productive capacity which is ample for all, taken in hand by a relative handful of country-less people, with no loyalty to any but themselves, through a totally false credit and money system. We have seen these same people create a I must have the latest of everything ism — so a coloured T.V. becomes a must to watch a lot of mostly degrading rubbish or feel deprived.

We have seen this same money power prop up and abet the advance of godless tyranny under communism on one hand while it mediates the decay of the strength of the rest of the world from ways of "real health", spiritually, morally and physically.

One of the saddest and most evil things is to see the unsuspecting less developed peoples of the earth taken out of the care of the mostly responsible colonial nations and under the guise of liberation plunged into mass slaughter and chaos of a scale never witnessed before. Much of this has been sold under a false banner of "liberalism" and in far too many Christian churches by an emphasis on materialism coupled with a departure from real faith and reliance on GOD and HIS WORD, known as "liberation theology". This I believe has yet to go further before it reaches its peak and is exposed as a prelude to greater slavery than these races have ever known.

Someone wisely said and it calls for reverence as we view this whole scene, that the paradox of faith is to fear God but not to be afraid.

So we come to a useful but inaccurate phrase we are very fond of using — natural law. I do not believe there is any such thing. What we really mean by natural law I believe are the footprints or paths of action God normally chooses to adopt. It is only because He usually does so that science and technology are possible. So what we call laws as if they were unalterable (though of course not normally altered) are but the observable, observed phenomena and patterns of behaviour which are the expressions of the Divine Nature — which adds up to perfection, properness, wholeness and health. In this great pattern nothing is meant to, or need fail. All should relate in harmony, enriching every other part and taking away from the true function of none. These are feeble words, but they are practical concepts — they are the very stuff of life.

Can you believe God means us to be a race of men, animals and plants riddled with disease, haunted by the fear of it, to be in a world where food can only be grown by the use of deadly sprays, poisons and lifeless fertilizers? Or that we are meant to be in a world where endless hospitals, surgery, drugs, tranquillizers, weird side-effects, with universal levels of poor health, mental disease, spasticity, hyper-activity and drug-addiction of all kinds are necessary props to make life possible or bearable? I believe the whole world in this century has fallen for the pathology trap — concentration on disease, not health, on the instant superficial results, on symptoms not causes, on the negatives not the positives, and I doubt if any of us have escaped this to some degree. I believe this applies equally in the field of thought too.

STRONG LEAGUE OF RIGHTS DELEGATION TO WORLD ANTI-COMMUNIST CONFERENCE

Mr. Eric Butler, President of The Crown Commonwealth League of Rights, will be leading a strong delegation to this year's World Anti-Communist League Conference in Washington in April. One of the delegates will be Mr. Frank Bawden, South Australian League Director, taking in the Conference on a long-service leave trip.

Mr. Butler anticipates that the Southern African situation will be a major issue at the Conference. He will be lecturing in Canada under the auspices of The Canadian League of Rights. It is planned to establish closer links with American anti-Communists through the Washington Conference.

QUEENSLAND PREMIER WARNS ON INFLATION

In his "Personally Speaking" statement of February 19, Queensland Premier J. Bjelke-Petersen, returns to the problem of inflation, which he has been warning about in recent years. The "often-stated proposals to increase . . . effective purchasing power" have come to be known as the "Petersen Plan". The revealing story of the campaign to suppress and distort this plan as told by Mr. Jeremy Lee in "Censored Economics. In his statement of February 19, the Queensland Premier said:

Next to natural disasters, inflation is one of the major problems facing rural Australia today.

Failure to halt inflation has caused many problems. Indeed, business and industry are under-productive, rising unemployment is causing increasing hardships for many Australians, and debt remains a massive burden for many to carry.

Australia's future depends on curbing inflation, and redirecting the nation away from greater centralisation and erosion of economic independence.

The nation is carefully watching the steps being taken in Canberra, and certainly all can rejoice that income tax interest rates and inflation have been eased slightly.

Unfortunately, academic theory about economics abounds in Canberra: there is insufficient awareness of the reality of the market place and farm.

Indeed, after some four years of rapid wage and salary increases, escalated interest rates, rising taxation in the aggregate, and their combined effect on inflation, many rural enterprises and small businesses are seriously weakened in the right against natural disaster. The formidable debt situation of many primary producers only compounds the difficulties.

I have the greatest sympathy for most unions and the overwhelming majority of trade unionists, who are generally hard working, decent and loyal Australians, and have given my Government strong electoral support.

Unionists are seriously affected by rising prices, high rates of interest, and the threat of unemployment. I believe my often-stated proposals to increase their effective purchasing power are far more constructive than a policy of constantly raising wages — which only adds to the inflationary spiral and eventually erodes wage gains.

Australians want inflation stopped; they gave the Commonwealth Government a mandate to get on with its economic reforms, and I am assured they are working towards this end.

Inflation itself creates division and stifles development. It is obvious that we need unity of purpose and co-operation between employer, employee, private enterprise and Government to overcome the current economic crisis.

Certainly, we must not become accustomed to accepting the high levels of inflation, which a few years ago were decried as disastrous, nor the equally high levels of unemployment.

I believe that a sound and workable programme for economic recovery would bring results.

This would mean better living, greater productivity, increased stability, and peace of mind for both ourselves and our children in the years ahead.

Premier of Queensland.

"THE LAST SECRET"

The official revelation that the British Government of Winston Churchill agreed at the infamous Yalta Conference of 1945 to forcefully repatriate masses of Russians back to the Soviet, provides yet one more sickening example of the retreat to barbarism which took place during and after the Second World War. The manner in which the whole shocking affair was suppressed by the media in both the United States and Britain, provides a devastating answer to those who claim that there are no conspiracies in the world protected by a servile media.

Although it is true that Stalin and Roosevelt formed a type of united front against Churchill at the Yalta Conference, when Churchill returned to London he made a strong defence of the Yalta betrayal to the House of Commons. Churchill had already surrendered to the Wall Street-Moscow conspiracy when he agreed to the criminal Morgenthau Plan for Germany in exchange for a promise of dollar credits after the war. The Morgenthau Plan for Germany was so diabolical that even Churchill said after the war that he was sorry he had agreed to it. The plan was never implemented, but the publicity given to it dramatically strengthened German resistance to the Western Allies, prolonged the war by at least an extra six months, thus permitting the Soviet to invade Europe.

In his famous BBC address, Solzhenitsyn spoke of the cowardly role of the British press in not publicising in any way the programme of forcing hundreds of thousands of Russians to return either to certain death in Russia or to years of hell in concentration camps. It is to the credit of British sailors and soldiers, from Field Marshal Alexander down, that they were nauseated by what the evil politicians forced them to do. Some took considerable risks in helping many Russians to escape. Many Russians committed suicide rather than go back under the control of the monster Stalin. Churchill's Foreign Minister Anthony Eden has been quoted as saying; "We cannot afford to be sentimental over this". Eden reflected the view of Roosevelt and his Wall Street backers that Stalin must be appeased at all costs, even if this meant handing over Russian refugees to be murdered and tortured.

The revelations concerning the suppressed story of the brutal repatriation of Russian refugees, some of whom had been living in the West since 1920, have been aptly described as "The last secret". The only hope now for the sick West is that such secrets are being exposed by a flood of literature. Truth is belatedly being revealed to the light of day.

THE NEW TIMES—MARCH 1978

SEARCHING QUESTIONS ON RHODESIA

In a letter dated February 23, Dr. J. C. A. Dique, President of the Queensland Branch of The Australia-Rhodesia Society, asked the following questions:

Are you aware that when Australia imposed Trade sanctions against Rhodesia it transgressed five Articles of the Charter of the United Nations and that the Security Council of the United Nations also transgressed them?

These are the Articles—

1. If Rhodesia was a colony of the Crown the whole matter was outside the jurisdiction of the United Nations. Articles 2(7) of the Charter.

2. If Rhodesia was a separate State it was necessary for her government to be invited to participate in any dispute. Article 32 of the Charter.

3. Conciliatory attempts demanded by the Charter for parties in dispute were never initiated. Articles 33 require this.

4. The dispute was never referred to the International Court of Justice. This is required by Article 36(3) of the Charter.

5. Concurrence of votes of permanent members of the Security Council was not obtained before Sanctions were imposed. Article 27(3) of the Charter demands this.

Are you aware that Australia imposed trade sanctions against Rhodesia on November 18, 1965 and that this in all probability encouraged the Security Council of the U.N. to impose Full sanctions on November 20 and the next year on December 16, 1966 the Security Council imposed Mandatory Trade Sanctions.

These however are not the only irregularities. Prior to the imposition of Sanctions Ghana, which was not at the time a member of the Security Council, was allowed to intervene and declare Rhodesia a threat to world peace. Ghana demanded Full Trade Sanctions against Rhodesia. Fourteen African states not members of the Security Council were allowed to intervene and declare Rhodesia a threat to world peace.

These are not the only irregularities, which the Australian Government has supported. These too are relevant—

Prior to the Federation of Rhodesia, Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland being created in October 1953 only Rhodesia had been self-governing since 1923. There was no provision in the Constitution of the Federation for its dissolution but it was dissolved unilaterally by Britain on 31/12/1963. Northern Rhodesia became Zambia and Nyasaland became Malawi, they were considered to be self-governing. Rhodesia, which had been promised self-government was denied this, the promise made to the Rhodesian Prime Minister was broken. (Made by First Secretary of State, Mr. R. A. Butler).

Are you aware that the Declaration of Independence of 11/11/1965 ends with the words "God save the Queen" and that there was no rebellion against the Crown but against the churlish treatment Rhodesia had received?

Are you aware that the American Secretary of State, Henry Kissinger manipulated the price of gold to coerce Mr. Vorster to "lean on" Mr. Ian Smith to get him to the conference table at Geneva?

Why does Australia support all this irregularity?

SCHOOLS TEACH NOTHING ABOUT MONEY REALITIES

"In our schools every little boy and girl had to learn that the earth is round and rotates on its axis, that the world has had certain kings and queens in the past. They learn a few words of languages, which men ceased to speak over a thousand years ago.

"Though they have to learn all this, they learn nothing of the nature of the thing which will concern them every hour of their lives — the money in their pockets, how it works, what banks do with it; how banks can increase it or decrease it. Of such things, which can be taught just as easily as the dead languages, or rules of grammar, or the vagaries of dead kings and queens, the average boy or girl learns not one word."

- Sir Norman Angell in an article in The Financial Post, London. November 2, 1940.

There has been little if any improvement in instruction in schools on the subject of money since Sir Norman Angell wrote the above. The underlying values of Western Civilisation have been overlaid by a parasitic money culture. That parasitic culture must be removed before the underlying values can blossom. This requires a freeing of the mind from the current superstitions concerning money. Education and events are essential.

GROWTH OF NATURAL HEALTH MOVEMENT IN U.S.A.

The clear-cut case of a Melbourne family adversely affected by fluoride in the public water supplied, as confirmed by the family's medical adviser, highlights once again the erosion of the individual's natural rights by the imposition of a policy of mass medication.

A medical bureaucracy is just as evil as any other bureaucracy. In the United States there has been a growing opposition to compulsory mass medication and the rapid expansion of a number of organisations working for freedom of choice concerning medical treatment and health care. The National Health Federation, the pioneering citizen organisation fighting for freedom of choice has a large and growing active membership. In a battle extending over 14 years, it eventually defeated a proposal by the Food and Drug Administration's proposed restriction on food supplements, minerals and vitamins.

The rapid growth of the International Association of Cancer Victims and Friends is further evidence of a challenge to centralised control of medical care. There is growing pressure to permit doctors to use B17 in the treatment of cancer if they and their patients so desire.

Genuine freedom of choice is the essence of real freedom. The rapidly growing demand for freedom of choice concerning medical care is one of those organic movements, which play a vital role in wrecking the plans of the centralisers in all spheres of human activity.

TO THE POINT

Leaders of the Joint Federation of Labor Congress of Industrial Organisations has called for new import quotas to save tens of thousands of American jobs. Asian Labor leaders are critical of their fellow Labor leaders in the USA. One has bluntly said the American restrictive policy means an international trade war. Such a war is now inevitable unless one nation gives a lead by changing its internal finance-economic policies so that intensive export drives are unnecessary.

Such is the madness of the export-or-perish mania, that instead of pressing for maximum consumption of beef in Australia. Australia's beef producers are told by their "leaders" that they must concentrate upon bigger exports. It is difficult to export meat to Japan because of the strict quotas, but easier to send it to the Japanese Province of Okinawa, which has a bigger beef quota. From Okinawa it is smuggled into the main Japanese Islands, with smugglers making a small fortune. A number of meat wholesalers have been arrested. As one report puts it, "Smuggling Australian steak and hamburger meat into the beef-starved Japanese islands can be almost as profitable as running dope".

A report late last year stated that the Australian Wool Corporation has arranged a $40 million overseas borrowing to support its trading activities, principally through the Rockefeller's Chase Manhattan banking group. The Fraser Government agreed last October to allow the Wool Corporation to borrow against stocks of wool held overseas. At the moment AWC stocks are over one million bales, with 300,000 bales being held overseas in Western Europe, US, Korea and Israel. This wool is real wealth produced by Australians in Australia. Instead of borrowing from overseas, credits could easily be made available at the cost of administration by the Reserve Bank to enable the AWC to operate its reserve price system. This would enable the levy on woolgrowers to be reduced, as much of the levy is required to pay interest bills.

On reading through many of the reviews on the October, 1977 Soviet celebrations of sixty years of Communism, we did not see one reference to the most important fact about the Bolshevik Revolution of October, 1917: that Lenin and Trotsky were financed by Wall Street international financiers. We would not expect the Communists to make any contribution towards exploding the myth about Communism. But we felt that a few of the anti-Communists might be bold enough to mention that the Bolsheviks were financed into power by Wall Street and that Wall Street has continued to finance the essential blood transfusions without which the Soviet would have collapsed years ago.

However, thanks to the Crown Commonwealth League of Rights, which financed the paperback edition of Dr. Sutton's blockbuster National Suicide, and the World Anti-Communist League report on how the Soviet is being financed from the West, one of the biggest of the money hoaxes of this century is being progressively exposed.

Revelations that not only Communist-dominated nations are making little effort to repay debts, plus interest, extended to them by Western-based banking organisations, but that "Third World" nations like Zaire in Africa are falling behind in their debt repayments, naturally prompts the question of why international banking organisations continue to extend credits to such bad risks. As most of the credits are created out of nothing in the usual manner, the banking organisations are losing nothing. But most of the debts are guaranteed - even if they don't know it - by Western taxpayers. Enormous quantities of Western production is being poured down bottomless pits, one argument being that this is essential to keep Western economies operating and to maintain "full employment".

A UNIQUE EDUCATIONAL MOVEMENT

Suppose you wish to obtain low-priced booklets containing the essence of the great Solzhenitsyn's words of warning — and wisdom — for the Western world. Where could you readily obtain them? And in quantity if necessary? Where can you obtain the famous Dr. Antony Sutton's scholarly documentation of the West's financing of the Soviet Union? Or the warnings of the famous British military strategist, General Sir Walter Walker? Which anti-Communist organisation only offers a wide range of publications on all aspects of the conspiracy against traditional society? The answer is the Australian League of Rights, a unique educational movement.

All concerned Australians can participate in its rapidly expanding in-depth educational movement by making use of the literature it provides. Obtain a copy of the latest League book list today and place an order for the literature you can then pass to your friends. In this way you can play a part in helping to save Australia from the totalitarian threat.
