Thought for the Week: "Not many matters are a ground for certainty nowadays, but on two of them it is possible to be fairly dogmatic.

"There will be no sensible improvement in world society until there is a radical decentralisation of money power; and there will be no decentralisation of money power by any centralised Government, no matter what it may call itself."

- C.H. Douglas (1945)

CRISIS ENDS: NOW FOR RECESSION: "Australia was heading towards a recession next year with high unemployment and a downturn in economic growth, leading economists said yesterday."

The Financial Australian (Oct. 31-Nov. 1)

Whilst the Hawke Fabian Socialist Government's spokesmen are more or less downplaying the stockmarket crashes, most non-government economists are forecasting gloom. As we have stated earlier, the Hawke Government is in its "duck-mode"; calmly seeming to glide over the surface of tumultuous economic events, whilst paddling furiously beneath the surface (of events). We have read that Paul Keating is taking daily briefings from Treasury "experts". This doesn't fill us with any confidence.

It is obvious, for starters, that anyone with any commonsense is now going to stop spending on unnecessary items such as luxury goods (stereos, sophisticated electronic equipment, new cars, travel and holidays). We would expect that retail sales this Christmas will be well down: that doesn't ensure that they will be down-but that's what we expect.

Ord Minnett's economist sees high inflation, high unemployment, and economic distress throughout the community. Yes, we expect higher interest rates to attract overseas capital (under the system), and if money is thought of as a commodity (as it is by standard "economics") - then this becomes part of costs, then prices, which must increase. Yes, we shall see higher inflation. Senator John Stone sees a severe recession ahead, with our credit rating further dented: wage increases must be "out"; Government spending must be cut. A mini- ("horror") Budget, we think. There is the suggestion that Brother Keating is delaying this until after the N.S.W. State election; to keep "Labor" in office in that State. This is probably right.

The lead article in the New Times (September, 1987, $1.00 posted) viz. "Another 1929 Is Not Inevitable", reinforces much of our lead item on the "Crashes" in the immediate past issue of On Target (Oct. 30th)..... During the four decades since the end of the Second World War, a major depression has been averted by a policy of continuous economic expansion financed by debt. The lessons of 1929 have been observed by the debt merchants and there appears to be little doubt that they wish to avoid a repeat of 1929, realising that this could quickly produce a major revolt against the credit monopolists. What is being witnessed everywhere is a type of slow squeeze, conditioning people to accept the 'inevitability' of the 'restructuring' of industries and societies as a preliminary to fitting them into the New International Economic Order. Consider the destruction of the traditional family farm, and family businesses, over recent decades. The strategy of the debt merchants and their various lackeys appears to be one of boiling the frog alive by trying to ensure that the temperature of the water is not raised too quickly, resulting in an attempted jump to safety.

Worse than 1929:

"The current situation is worse than the Great Depression years, when traditional values were at least the norm. There was not the social disintegration of today. The greatest threat today is not another major depression, which could soon result in dramatic developments, but the continuing social breakdown as the individual is threatened by the many forms of collectivisation. There was a famous Fabian-inspired statement that only in war, or under the threat of war, would the British people submit to large-scale planning. It would appear that the spate of predictions about another 1929 are designed to condition people to believe that this threat can only be averted, or minimised, by people surrendering more of their sovereignties" (end of quote).

Note: This "The New Times" article was written well before the Stock-Market Crashes of October '87. We observed in our "Crashes" item in On Target (Oct. 30th) that..."We don't believe that the last week's crashes just happened: they happened for a reason"... It is almost certain, we do believe, that the "Crashes"-and the drive for further centralisation of government in the West, are of a piece. A re-reading of our "Thought for the Week" by C.H. Douglas will help to broaden one's picture of current political and economic events.

HAWKE GOVERNMENT TAKES INSTRUCTIONS FROM INTERNATIONAL ZIONISM:

"Australians convicted of war crimes could be imprisoned for life under a Bill introduced in Federal Parliament yesterday".

-The Sun (Melbourne) October, 29th

We have not seen reference to this Bill in any other of the print media: we knew that this would be the likely result of a recent Government "inquiry" into suspected "war criminals" in Australia. These "war criminals", of course, are Europeans (now naturalised Australians) who Simon Wiesenthal and his cronies have "tracked down". We cannot elaborate on this issue at any length really, until we have studied the legislation.

But the obvious point is that our Commonwealth Fabian Socialist Government is legislating on matters that are not intrinsically concerned with Australia. All this happened 40 or more years ago, in other corners of the globe. We know that the Zionist propaganda machines (and they are powerful efficient, machines - let's give them that!) will churn out the line that everyone of every race must be concerned about the Holocaust, etc., etc.) - but the fact remains that most people want to put these events, (which are disputed by some historians, anyway) behind them. And so it goes on, and on, and on, and on. Will it ever finish?

Another point at issue is retrospective legislation. We know that that monumental disaster, Malcolm Fraser, spoke in favour of retrospective legislation, with respect to other matters; however, we consider retrospective legislation to be of the devil. There are other matters which will emerge as the Bill becomes widely known, as it will be. Make no mistake about that. We can say that the Australian Civil Liberties Union is already well alerted and "ready to go". We have doubts about the "Victorian Council for Civil Liberties": it will be interesting to observe this body's attitude to the Bill. So will be the attitude of many politicians: many will be luke-warm about the Bill but will not dare to voice public protest. Some will hate themselves. Still this and other issues will torture politicians from now onwards, and quite unexpected developments will be bound to emerge. We shall keep supporters informed as relevant events transpire.

COMRADE MUGABE FAVOURS WHITE EX-OPPONENTS FOR ZIMBABWE PARLIAMENT:

Robert Mugabe has selected, for example, Ian Smith, to fill a seat in Zimbabwe's restructured Parliament: eight former Rhodesian Front members have been selected by Mugabe.

Here's a rub! Remember Judith Todd, who toured the world denouncing the Ian Smith Government? She has been dumped. All of Mr Nkomo's candidates were rejected (Z.A.P.U.) Why?

We can't be sure. Perhaps Robert Mugabe trusts the people who fought him in the past rather than those who betrayed their own kith and kin. If so; rather shrewd, we think.

A.I.D.S. REALITIES NOW SLICING THROUGH PHONEY IDEOLOGIES:

For too long the A.I.D.S. "debate": has been hampered, even suppressed, as a result of quite fallacious social climates against "discrimination" - these usually brought about by "Mickey Mouse" legislation based on United Nations Declarations or conventions. What most of this so-called "enlightened" legislation (being of the Devil:) gives legal protection to sin. (in this case)

In The Weekend Australian (Oct. 31 - Nov. 1) Norman Podhoretz, Editor of (U.S.) "Commentary", states:

"Slowly, slowly, and against resistance every inch of the way, the truth about AIDS is beginning to emerge. Soon it will become impossible to go on denying that, in so far as AIDS is a sexually transmitted disease, it really is the 'gay plague' it was at first taken to be."

We have read that the disease was first named "G.A.I.D.S." ("Gay" - auto-immune deficiency syndrome). Truth is the great disciplinarian: when more and more deaths from AIDS sheet home the blame to homosexuals, the fallacious ideologies will slowly slip away, and especially when those deaths are people we knew, even dear ones. It is happening.

Podhoretz observes that of the Haitians who contracted AIDS, few, if any did so via heterosexual activity. Africa? We hear a lot about AIDS and Africa. The heterosexual rates of transmission there, we hear so much about from the "Gay Community", are associated with sanitary and other factors of a non-sexual nature.

Podhoretz asserts that it is not sex in general that exposes people to AIDS; it is homosexual activity in particular. God will not be mocked: if people are foolish enough to believe that by calling sin another name they can absolve themselves from the consequences, then the penalties are theirs.
