Thought for the Week: "We have stumbled into a Constitutional crisis that is likely to be remembered as one of the most significant political events in our history since the Commonwealth came into being at the beginning of this century. Few people realise that when on September 3 adult Australians will be summoned to vote on four referendum questions designed to alter our Constitution, they will be taking part in little more than a charade of horrendous implications. Let the government come clean, stop this charade and give us back the full strength of the rights we were given on January 1, 1901."

- The Weekend Australian, June 11th.

LEAGUE NOW THE LITMUS TEST IN AUSTRALIAN POLITICS: An article by Mr. Robert Manne, senior lecturer in politics at the LaTrobe University, in The Herald, Melbourne, of July 18th., provides a striking example of how the Australian League of Rights has become a type of litmus test for what is happening in Australian politics. In an orchestrated national campaign, following the Senator Boswell attack in the Senate, critical references to the League have appeared in the print media as well as on radio and television. Whatever the subject being discussed - immigration, the referendums, Citizens' Initiative Referendum and Recall, Second World War trials - the League is brought into the discussion. The League's alleged stance is used in an attempt to damn anyone taking the same stance. The ABC 7.30 Report attempted to link Professor Geoffrey Blainey with the League of Rights.

Robert Manne is a Jew who has never expressed much enthusiasm for the Zionist point of view. In his Melbourne Herald article he presents an excellent case, so far as it goes, against the holding of Second World War crime trials in Australia. Manne argues that the war crimes legislation will have a harmful effect on Australian Jews. But even worse than that, "Anti-Semitic groups like the League of Rights will gain a more receptive audience than they have had for years. If the first defendant in a Nazi war crimes trial is acquitted - even on technical grounds - the vile lobby which denies the reality of the holocaust, will have a field day."

Mr. Manne does not specify which "holocaust" he is talking about, but the inference is that there is only one holocaust, that involving Jews allegedly systematically gassed to death - 6 million of them - by the Nazis during the Second World War. While there is growing controversy concerning the number of Jews who perished during the Second World War, and how they died, there is no argument that one of the most frightful events of the destructive Second World War was the bombing of the defenceless and cultural city of Dresden, packed with refugees fleeing in the face of the advancing Soviet forces, resulting in the loss of life matching that of the losses of the Japanese when the atomic bomb was dropped on two of their cities. There is no "Dresden Day" as there is a "Horishama Day".

During one open-line radio programme, the commentator said that there were a lot of "paranoid" people worrying about the Fabian Socialist Society. The League of Rights is blamed for creating this "paranoia". While it is true that the League of Rights has been promoting the idea of electors controlling their Members of Parliament, and has been advocating the introduction of the Citizens' Initiative Referendum, this concept has been taken up right across Australia by many groups not affiliated with the League of Rights. The truth is that the League has, over many years, created a climate of opinion in which there is now an organic growth of diverse groups who have taken up in their own way, the concepts which the League has been advancing.

We are receiving a wide variety of reports from across Australia, concerning manifestations of the Anti-League campaign. There have been so many of these that we have not been able to cope with an adequate response, and to thank all those writing in. Our main task is to ensure that the League remains "on course", and continues to bear witness to that Truth which shall make us free. In spite of all the endeavours of its detractors, the League has moved to the forefront of the political stage in Australia. It has become a major issue in Australian politics with the anti-League campaign being a measure of the League's effectiveness.

A NOTE ON THE 1988-89 BASIC FUND: Australia has reached a major watershed in its history and there is no doubt that the future will be determined largely by what happens on September 3rd. The League has been preparing in depth for this historic battle for months, with much of its quiet work already producing encouraging fruits. But the League will shortly also be entering the referendum campaign in a more direct manner. Expense is being incurred for paper and printing supplies, and for much else. Normally the League's Basic Fund appeal is launched late in September. Because of the critical situation, it may be necessary to launch it a little earlier this year. The target will be kept at $60,000. We mention it at this time in order that all supporters can give serious consideration to what they might give when the official launch of the campaign takes place. There can be no question of failure. Any who care to make an early contribution will be making a vital contribution to the winning of a battle which we dare not lose.

TOWARDS THE CASHLESS SOCIETY: We have consistently pointed out, with appropriate documentation, that it is the stated intention of a variety of power groups, the most important being the controllers of the International Debt system, to create a centrally planned World State. Broadly speaking, there are two types of people involved in the attempt to centralise power: the Plotters, who consciously advance a strategic programme, and the Planners, who in the main can be relied upon to display a mania for "making people good", and who automatically gravitate to an attitude that every human problem can only be solved by more planning. No totalitarian system can operate without the petty official.

There is no argument that there is an intention to create the "Cashless society". But giving effect to that intention is another thing. In response to those who have, we suggest, become victims of their own fears, and who ask have we not seen the 1986 Report to the Prime Minister on the subject of a cashless society, prepared by the Technological Change Committee of the Australian Science and Technology Council (ASTEC), yes, we have had a copy of the report soon after it was released on May 23, 1986, and are encouraged by the report's admission concerning the extreme difficulties of establishing a cashless society.

Instead of becoming paralysed with fear concerning the threat of all programmes for centralising power, the constructive thing to do is to take every opportunity not to co-operate with such programmes. No one is forced to use a credit card. And if you do not like all those government and bank charges every time you write a cheque, well aim to write fewer cheques and to use more cash. The banking system is legally obliged to provide cash for those requesting it. Yes, it may sometimes be a little more inconvenient. But a widespread insistence upon obtaining and using cash, at least puts a break on the centralisers.

BRIEF COMMENTS: John Demjanjuk, the Ukrainian-born American citizen languishing in an Israeli prison awaiting the outcome of his appeal against the verdict of an Israeli court of which the chief justice was a former terrorist, would still be in the USA with his family if the USA Office of Special Investigations had not suppressed a letter from the Communist Polish Ministry of Justice, dated August 31, 1979, in which it was stated that "we do not have any data concerning Ivan (John) Demjanjuk" Other vital information was also suppressed by the OSI, which has been run by pro-Zionists. Members of Demjanjuk's family and supporters are currently engaged in legal action concerning the role of the OSI in having Demjanjuk sent to Israel.

Both Victorian "Labor" and the Victorian Liberals are attempting to put the best face on the result of the Ballarat North by-election. Mr. John Cain, the Victorian Premier, claims loudly that the trend against "Labor" in by-elections has been halted. Maybe it has. The recent disunity and disorganisation among the Federal Liberals and Nationals would be sufficient to put anyone off. Jeff Kennett, the Leader of the Victorian Parliamentary Liberal Opposition, is uninspiring, to say the least.

Mr. Kennett is making some shaky claims, too.

We viewed Mr. Lionel Bowen, Federal Attorney-General, on weekend T.V. speaking on the coming Referenda on the Constitution. We are asked to believe that the "people" have been left to decide; that the politicians have been kept out of the debate.

We don't believe this. We believe that the purpose of the Constitutional Commission has been that of a Fabian Socialist propaganda bureaucracy. The "people" didn't ask, didn't want the Referendums on the Constitution; they have been rammed down Australians' throats. The Fabian Socialists wanted the Constitution Commission, with the 4 points (Referendums) to launch a further attack on the political sovereignty of the States and Australians generally ... We do not believe that there is a "strong" support for the Referendums, as claimed by Mr. Bowen. He is not going to announce, via a nation-wide T.V. announcement, that he'll lose on September 3rd, as we pray he does.
