THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK: "In our Holy Faith there have always been watchmen as well as preachers. At times the watchmen are the more hated as they disturb the false peace and tranquility of the people with their urging to arise and to defend their Civilisation. It is often simpler to listen to the 'Enemy within the Gate' than to heed the "Watchmen on the Wall", and sometimes when the cry is raised to stone the watchmen the people fail to see it is the Enemy within who has instigated it.

"It is easy to laugh at the story of the man who found it less trouble to shoot the watchman than to defend his house against the intruder. He may have got more sleep, but at what great price? Especially if it involved the destruction of the souls of his children! I have tried, in my own way to be a watchman."

STAGE SET FOR LEAGUE INVESTIGATION: The Sydney Sun-Herald of February 19th carried an article on the subject of "racism" in Australia, referring to the coming investigation into "violent racism" by Irene Moss under the auspices of the Human Rights Commission. If writer Walker is quoting Irene Moss correctly, she has already pronounced judgment on the League of Rights. She falsely links the League of Rights with National Action, listing them among unnamed "several groups" who are "dangerously close to inciting violence". It will be recalled that Federal Opposition leader John Howard was also charged with inciting racist violence when he suggested that a modification of present immigration policies was essential. John Stone, Queensland National Party Senator, was much more blunt than Mr. Howard, stating that the rate of Asian immigration was too great. Stone was immediately relegated to the Opposition back-benches. We feel it extremely unlikely that people like Senator Stone, R.S.L. leader Bruce Ruxton, or Historian Geoffrey Blainey will be listed as those tending to incite "racial violence". The League of Rights is the major target and it was announced last week that the investigation by The Human Rights Commission will be assisted by well-known Melbourne Zionist Q.C., A. Castan.

But the Anti-League campaigners are tending to overlay their hands. Prior to the special Eric Butler Shepparton Meeting on February 8th, one of the League's persistent critics in the provincial paper, The Shepparton News, Mr. John Gray, was invited to attend the meeting to question the speaker. This invitation was publicised, as was Gray's response: no, he would not attend the meeting, but he was willing to interview Eric Butler at The News. Accompanied by Mr. Terry Rogers, Eric Butler met with both John Gray and the Editor, Mr. Rob McLean, in a lengthy in-depth discussion. In his next column, John Gray, a school-teacher, expressed some grudging admiration for Eric Butler, but in essence said he remained unconvinced about the League.

The Editor's reaction was rather different. He had been critical of the League over some years. But in an editorial headed, "HANDLE MR. BUTLER'S LEAGUE WITH CARE", he opened by saying, "Eric Butler is an extraordinary man. He is a complex fellow with an athletic mind. His appearance could best be described as 'ordinary', but such a term could never be applied to his other qualities. Mr. Butler is intelligent, resourceful, courageous, committed, patriotic, courteous, articulate and blunt." We we will not quote the editorial further, except to say that amidst the generally complimentary remarks, the editor left no doubt that he still has some reservations about the League.

Now not only this editorial, but the excellent report of the National Director's Shepparton address in The News, was widely observed, so much so that the journalist, Andrew Lias, who covered the meeting, records that he has received what he describes as a "remarkable letter" from none other than Queensland Senator Boswell. "Remarkable" is an understatement concerning a letter which states that it is "extremely dangerous to give Press coverage to someone like Eric Butler unless you are willing to write all the facts to present a balanced and comprehensive view".

Andrew Lias makes it clear that he "dislikes" Eric Butler and the League of Rights, but he has also made it clear that he feels that his integrity as a professional journalist has been impugned. In a letter to The News Eric Butler congratulates the reporter on what was a well-presented precis of much of what he said. Lias says concerning Senator Boswell, "It is almost terrifying that someone who represents us in the national Parliament should be so ignorant of basic journalistic obligation as to write such a letter." Andrew Lias might consider the question of whether in fact Senator Boswell did actually write the letter he received. If Senator Boswell is carrying out his duties as a representative of the Queensland people, he should not have time to be surveying the Provincial media of Australia for any favourable or factual reports about the League of Rights.

The truth is that a psycho-political war is being waged against the Australian people in an attempt to convince them that the League of Rights and its message should be rejected. Senator Boswell and other politicians are the "useful idiots" being manipulated. We await with interest the reaction of Irene Moss and Mr. Castan to the League's formal submission, briefly outlined in the special February issue of The Intelligence Survey. The stage has been set for an interesting year!

MULTI-CULTURALISM IN CANADA: Mr. Enoch Powell, the great prophet of British politics, warns that the United Kingdom is moving towards civil war, and that senior members of the British Government now accept that such a conflict is almost inevitable. The friction and violence which stems from attempting to create multi-racial societies is the result of the use of idealists manipulated by those who understand how to break up stable societies. Increasing reports from the U.S.A. stress the mounting violence in a nation becoming increasingly multi-cultural. The same development is taking place in the big cities of Canada.

Toronto was at one time claimed to be the biggest Anglo-Saxon city on the North American continent. Now it has an enormous black community of 400,000. A recent report says, "Toronto has taken a couple of major steps toward becoming like Detroit, with its Beirut-like murder rate, its dispirited police, and whole sections of the city where black thugs are completely in control, terrorising blacks and whites alike." Police who attempt to deal with black thugs are charged with "racism". Early this year two policemen who attempted to apprehend young blacks in a stolen car, but when told to get out the driver drove the car at the police, knocking one to the ground. The policeman pulled his revolver and fired two shots at the rear tyres of the car. Hearing the two shots, the other officer thought his colleague had been shot and fired two shots at the car. It was dark. The result was the death of the driver of the stolen car. Black radical groups went into action, the politicians caved in, fearful of being charged with "racism", and the police officers were charged. The black radicals were not satisfied, and wanted the police charged with murder.

Shortly afterwards another police officer was charged with manslaughter because he had shot a Jamaican immigrant threatening another officer with a knife. An investigation resulted in the Crown Prosecutor stating that there was not sufficient evidence to lay a charge. But the weak politicians over-ruled this decision, fearful of the threat of black violence. The Toronto police were shocked, one police officer being quoted as saying that the police will have to start looking the other way when they see black criminals in action.

But when a young white boy of 19 years was brutally stabbed to death in his car by two blacks, subsequently charged with murder, the Minister for Culture and Citizenship, Gerry Phillips, who had attended the funeral of the black shot by the police, was not present at the white boy's funeral. Phillips' office explained "It was a different set of circumstances". Yes, the boy was white.

A black Jamaican woman wrote to the Toronto Sun (January 17th) in which she said, "It is evident that many who came to Canada while very young or were born here have completely lost their sense of direction, their discipline, purpose and identity. The last thing they need is a bunch of bungling black adults inciting them to civil disobedience and lawlessness."

What Australia needs, quickly, is a financial policy which encourages young Australians to own their own home and to have the number of children they desire. And the rate of non-European immigration should be drastically reduced. Unless this is done, Australia will be experiencing the same friction which other countries are experiencing. No politician should be supported at the next Federal Elections who will not promise the Australian people the right by referendum to have a direct say on basic issues like immigration.

BRIEF COMMENTS: The orchestrated campaign against the coming visit to South Africa by the President of the Victorian Cricket Association, Mr. Ray Steele, in which sections of the media and the Uniting Church are prominent, is a sickening example of how low some Australians are prepared to grovel. Victorian Premier John Cain weeps that if Steele accepts an invitation to attend cricket centenary celebrations in South Africa, black African States might vote against Melbourne's bid to stage the 1996 Olympic Games. If the staging of the Olympic Games depends upon the support of the many criminal thugs running many African States, then it would be better if Melbourne did not host the Games. With the blatant use of drugs, the gross commercialism and the political overtones, it is high time that the Olympic Games were abolished.

Let Mr. Ray Steele proceed to South Africa without any more humbug.
