THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK: ".... slogans, so far from being mindless, are a concentrated manifestation of the power of the mind, and political dynamite. Slogans can be for good or for evil purposes; but this is a period where slogans carefully conceived by evil minds are playing a literally vital role in the most intense and deadly attack on spiritual civilisation in the whole of history; for slogans are perhaps indispensable for the formation and cohesion of mobs.

"A mob...has its own particular psychology, whose main feature is probably suggestibility - a near hypnotic condition of mind which will accept uncritically ideas normally repugnant to belief. But these ideas, once accepted, thereafter lead a life of their own, and generate in the individual activities which would otherwise hardly have been contemplated.

- Dr. Bryan Monahan in The Moving Storm

PARTIES IGNORE BASIC ISSUES: The major political parties will spend probably in excess of $30million between them in a type of psychological war with sloganising and gimmicks the main ammunition. But it is certain that the parties are not going to discuss the major threats to Australia's future as an independent nation. The Opposition has produced no genuine policy alternatives to those of the Hawke Government. It will claim, correctly, that the real standard of living of the Australian people has been reduced by the Hawke Government's policies. But it will not be saying what it would have done had it been the government. As yet there is no suggestion that a Peacock Government would pursue a financial policy which would make it possible for Australians to use their vast natural resources and productive capacity to improve their standard of living. There is no proposal for an effective de-centralisation of power back to the people.

Mr. Peacock and his colleagues are going to argue that they are better equipped to "manage" the economy than is the Hawke Government. If the election is confined mainly to whom is better qualified to "manage" basically the same policies, and a type of presidential contest between Hawke and Peacock, then Hawke must be rated with the best chance of winning. Andrew Peacock can only win by default, and then take Australia further down the disaster road.

Responsible electors will only allocate their votes to those candidates who give a firm undertaking that their first allegiance is to their electors, and who will endeavour at all times to represent the policies of their electors. If no candidate is prepared to do this, electors should attend the polling booth and write on their voting form, "None of the applicants for the task of representing me is acceptable".

We see no reason to change our previously expressed view that the best election result would, in the long term, be the return of the Hawke Government, preferably with a majority of one or two, faced with a Senate in which the balance of power would be held by the smaller parties and independents.

The election by default of a Peacock Government can only delay the re-grouping and re-generation of all those Australians who still hold to traditional values. But whatever the election result, the real battle for Australia's future will continue after the elections.

THE MANDELA MADNESS: The Mandela myth has been created primarily by the international mass media. Mandela was not sent to prison because he opposed "apartheid", but because he was involved in a planned revolutionary campaign to overthrow the Government of South Africa. He and his fellow Marxist revolutionaries received a fair trial in an open court. If he had been involved in such a campaign in any of the Marxist nations he has admired he would have been shot. Mandela admits that he was well treated in prison and was not subjected to any physical abuse.

Mandela has told a BBC interviewer that the African National Congress must continue its armed struggle while the "violence" of apartheid continued and that government installations were legitimate targets for bombing attacks. Revealing his appalling ignorance, or worse, of South African history, Malcolm Fraser is supporting Mandela, claiming that the African National Congress only resorted to violence after what allegedly happened at Sharpeville with the shooting of "non-violent" black demonstrators. Just prior to the Sharpeville affair the same type of "non-violent" Africans, whipped to hysteria by their leaders, over-ran and brutally massacred the police at another centre. Even while Mandela was talking about "peace", Africans were murdering one another. "Majority rule" in South Africa would be a bloody affair.

BRIEF COMMENTS: Victorian Senator Austin Lewis's comments on Andrew Peacock, John Howard and the state of the Liberal Party, merely confirmed the obvious. But to make comments publicly was a demonstration of the type of stupidity so prevalent among politicians. Senator Lewis was one of the two Liberals who supported Queensland National Senator Boswell in his infamous attack on the League of Rights in 1988.

LEAGUE OF RIGHTS ENTERS ELECTION BATTLE!

Funds Urgently Required for National Programme

After careful preparation, the League of Rights is entering the Federal Election campaign as a vital part of its on-going strategy for promoting a National Survival programme.

The first step in this campaign is to force open discussion during the election campaign on the hidden agenda for the progressive surrender of Australia's independence. The political parties do not want to discuss this agenda.

Two special issues of the League's Intelligence Survey have been prepared for national distribution. They are packed with explosive material which actionists can use in their own ways. The February issue, now being mailed, exposes how the genuine conservation movement has been hijacked by the "power junkies". The March issue has been expanded to 16 pages to enable adequate exposure of the treacherous Multi Function Polis policy, immigration and multi-culturalism.

Because of the urgency of the situation, every League contact will receive two copies of the February and March issues of The Survey, irrespective of whether they are subscribers or not. The two copies will provide all recipients with a spare copy with which to start campaigning immediately. This is straining the League's tight financial budget, but this is no time for a weak-hearted approach.

Adequate supplies are being printed ahead of bulk orders so that there will be a minimum of delay in filling these orders. The League does not have the "millions of dollars" its critics claim, but its directors do have faith that its relatively heavy financial outlay for the election campaign will bring adequate financial support.

What is urgently required is a flood of donations, irrespective of how small, or large, to push the League's Basic Fund past its $65,000 objective. At least another $8,000 is required.

The League's campaign is designed not only to influence the election campaign, BUT TO LAY THE FOUNDATIONS FOR A NATIONAL SURVIVAL PROGRAMME AFTER THE ELECTIONS. Growing numbers of Australians realise that irrespective of who wins the elections, their country is in deep trouble and that major policy changes are essential if Australia is to survive.

As the crisis deepens, the role of the League of Rights becomes more vital. It must not falter at this critical time because of lack of adequate financial support.

Brief Comments (Continued): As far as we know, not one representative of the media interviewing Nelson Mandela and his wife Winnie in their Soweto home, asked the smiling lady about her endorsement of the barbaric "necklacing" carried out by ANC supporters against fellow blacks. Perhaps such a question would be regarded as bad taste at a time when the Mandelas are attempting to project an image of sweetness and light. At a time when even it is being openly admitted in the Soviet Union and the Eastern European nations that Socialist economic policies have been a disaster, Nelson Mandela is advocating a Marxist economic programme for South Africa.

Fiji could be back in the news before long. Recent army exercises, following the statement three weeks ago by General Rambuka, that the army still held ultimate power and would intervene if there were any challenge to the proposed new Constitution enshrining indigenous Fijian majority rule, indicate that another coup is possible. As in Malaysia the indigenous people are determined to maintain control of their own country. Fiji is a classic example of the problems of multi-racial societies. Australians should take note - while they still have time.

Greg Sheridan, in his article in The Weekend Australian, February 17th-18th, makes many pertinent observations. His article, on page 24, carries the title "Towards the Disunited States". He observes:

"Whenever anyone tells you that some historical trend or other is inevitable you should instantly put your money on just the opposite taking place"....."Teilhard de Chardin, the dottiest of Catholic theologians"....."Any social theory which is determinist, which believes that the social development of man is predetermined by historical forces and therefore predictable, whether it be Marxism or evolution, is bunk..."

"I predict, that within 15 years at most the EC (European Community) will be seen to be a disaster and will fracture, possibly amid great rancour and acrimony."

Pardon us, Mr. Sheridan, the League of Rights was saying just that some THIRTY YEARS AGO.
