THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK: "Scarcely any of those who read what the paper tells them know who has written what they read, or what source of information he possesses, or what intellectual weight. The voice seems to issue from a sort of superman, and has a hypnotic power of compelling assent... Strange is the fascination of the printed page. Men who would give little credence to a tale told by a neighbour, or even written to them by a friend, believe what the newspaper tells them merely because they see it in print."

- Lord Bryce in Modern Democracies, Vol.1, p.116.

CLOSING DOWN AUSTRALIAN INDUSTRIES: The print media continues to publish stories of Australian manufacturing industries either being re-located in other countries, generally South-East Asian, or becoming importers of what they originally produced. Treasurer Paul Keating and his colleagues insist that they are "internationalising" the Australian economy in order that it will be more "competitive" and "efficient". But they are not telling the Australian people that they and their "advisers" are pursuing a long-term strategy to integrate the Australian economy into the New International Economic Order, and that Australia has already surrendered much of its sovereignty by the signing of a number of international agreements. And the Federal Opposition is not warning the Australian people about this strategy for the good reason that they are basically in agreement with what is being done. It should be remembered that Dr. Hewson, leader of the Federal Liberal Party, spent some time working with the International Monetary Fund, one of the main instruments being used by the internationalists.

The concept for The New International Economic Order was formalised at the United Nations early in 1974. Dr. Henry Kissinger, spokesman for David Rockefeller of the notorious Trilateral Commission, had played a major role in setting the stage by contending that separate nations could no longer solve their own problems and that new international machinery was necessary to develop a "World Community". Dr. Kissinger saw the development of a new international currency under control of The International Monetary Fund as a way of helping to finance The New International Economic Order. The whole concept had the warm endorsement of both the Moscow and the Beijing Marxists, who correctly said it was merely an extension of Lenin's teaching that a World State could not be created until the economies of the whole world were internationalised.

Following the 1974 U.N. resolution (adopted on May 1st, 1974) for the development of a New International Economic Order, a vital conference of the United Nations Industrial Development Organisation took place in Lima, Peru, resulting in what is known as the "Lima Declaration". Anyone who studies this declaration will readily grasp what is happening to Australia's manufacturing industries. The essence of what was proposed was the transfer of resources from the developed to the underdeveloped nations, who were to be favoured with liberal grants and loans, some of those interest free. A few Australian business leaders became concerned, one of these being Neil Walford of REPCO, who said, "The reality is that our industries have no protection at all when it comes to competing with countries where workers are paid only a quarter or a fifth of ours." He also pointed out that the big difference in taxes levied also discriminated against Australian industries.

It was during the Whitlam era that Australia made the first moves to start to comply with the New International Order concept. The Fraser Government continued on with what had been initiated by the Whitlam Government. Prime Minister Malcolm Fraser's enthusiasm for the "North-South Dialogue" was linked with the New International Economic Order concept, a major feature of which is to bring basic resources, including miners and grains, under international control. Liberal Premier of West Australia, Sir Charles Court, was one of the few to grasp the far-reaching implications of what was proposed, stating in 1978 that he was greatly concerned about "the New International Economic Order concept, incorporating international commodity boards for the purpose of imposing external control on individual producing nations...."

As a dedicated International Socialist, Prime Minister Hawke embraced the New International Order concept with enthusiasm. The de-regulation of the banking system was quickly implemented as a major step in the general strategy of internationalisation. Protection of Australian industries has been progressively scaled down. But while Australians are told that protection for their industries, both primary and secondary, must be phased out, other countries, like Japan, insist upon protection. There was a recent uproar in Japan when foreign-grown rice, including some from Australia, was merely on display. The Italians appear to have more sense than Australians, with only 3,000 Japanese cars being allowed into Italy every year. It might be said that protection is by government Fiat!

If Australia is to survive as a genuinely free and independent nation, the strategy of internationalism must be reversed, with a progressive withdrawal from all those international agreements which undermine Australia's sovereignty. Every effort must be made to strive for the maximum of economic self-sufficiency, trade with the rest of the world being on the basis of exchanging genuine surpluses, such as wool and woollen products, for required imports from other countries.

Centralisation versus de-centralisation is the basic issue now openly dominating the human drama.

BRIEF COMMENTS: Ex-terrorist Israeli Prime Minister, Mr. Shamir, made it clear last week that while he is prepared to talk to Palestinians, this will be on his terms. Shamir's programme is for a limited Palestinian autonomy during an interim period. But self-determination is completely out. In the meantime the violence and the killing goes on in the Israeli occupied territories. Generally overlooked in discussions about the future of Israel, is that the country is already straining its water resources to the limit, and that the planned re-settlement of at least one million Russian Jews, will require an expansion of water supplies. This will require further expansion of Israel's borders, with still greater Middle East unrest. The Western media has "played down" the rising tide of anti-Western feeling which has swept the whole Moslem world as a result of the Gulf War.

Hopefully the revelations concerning the "new education" in Victoria will produce a massive revolt. V.C.E. Year 11 students are not to bother about history and geography. But prostitutes have discussed their "work" with students. The study of prostitution is deemed to be relevant" to the course theme of "Work in Australian society". The young must be "exposed to realism", it is argued. Homosexuals have also been brought in to discuss "alternative life styles". But why stop with prostitutes, homosexuals and lesbians? What about a further dash of realism by bringing in a few thugs and gangsters to discuss their life-style and how they operate? Convicted murderers could also be used to enlighten the young. Education vouchers for all parents, making it financially possible for them to "vote" for the type of schools they want is an urgent necessity to protect young Australians from diabolical evil.

The March issue of The Metal Worker joined the growing ranks of the anti-League of Rights campaigners across the nation. Trade Unionists who read The Metal Worker are told that the "populist" movement triggered off by Danny Johnson's Melbourne rally on January 4th, "has links to League of Rights". The League is described as usual - "an ultra-right wing...neo-Nazi organisation". This is the same type of gutter language used by defenders of the totalitarian party system. On the eve of the big Horsham National Survival Rally, the local Uniting Church was warning about the League and passing out Senator Boswell's infamous attack on the League in the Senate.

Now we know what the "New World Order" is about! Readers of Adelaide's morning daily, The Advertiser, of February 26th, were electrified to read in the column, WHAT'S YOUR PROBLEM?, that the New World Order being advocated by President Bush and Prime Minister Hawke had its roots in the Illuminati, founded back in 1776, and that it had been developed through the Communist conspiracy. Dr. Carol Quigley's famous work, Tragedy and Hope, was quoted and the role of the international bankers mentioned. Mention was made of the planned formation of the United States of Europe by 1992. Some media commentators and others were appalled. The Advertiser came under such pressure that in its issue of March 9th it corrected the previous answer concerning The New World Order, quoting President Bush as saying, "We are now in sight of a United Nations that performs as envisioned by its founders." The Communist conspirators played a major role in the establishment of the United Nations, as a study of its origins confirms. The first Acting Secretary General of the United Nations at the San Francisco Conference of 1945, was top U.S. State Department official, Alger Hiss, subsequently exposed as a top Soviet agent in the U.S.A. Another top Soviet secret agent, Harry Dexter White, of the American Treasury Department, was the main architect of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, along with British economist John Maynard Keynes.

THE BASIC FUND: YES, WE'VE MADE IT! In a magnificent burst over the past few weeks, supporters swept the Basic Fund from nearly $69,000 to $77,000. The surplus of $4,000 will be allocated to the 1991-92 Basic Fund. The successful conclusion of the 1990-91 Basic Fund demonstrated that in spite of the increasingly difficult circumstances, the League of Rights has consolidated itself to the stage where a whole range of new initiatives can be taken to meet the deepening national crisis. A part of the last Basic Fund has been allocated to a greatly expanded publishing programme. As a result of the Middle East crisis, an increasing number of people have found their way to the League as the only source of reliable background information on the Middle East. The League is also planning to produce well-researched educational material suitable for younger Australians who, as a result of a defective educational system, have been cut off from a real understanding of their own priceless heritage.
