THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK: "Am I therefore become your enemy, because I tell you the truth." - St.Paul in Galatians 4:16.

IDEOLOGICAL IDIOTS AND THE STATE OF THE WORLD: Senator Gareth Evans is the true ideologue, completely divorced from reality. His performance in South Africa was a classic example of the type of ideological idiocy which has swept much of the world during this century, with disastrous results. The premature withdrawal of the European colonial powers from Africa, accompanied by a world-wide campaign, promoters of which eulogised the "winds of change" which would see the Africans enjoying a glorious new world as the "colonial yoke" was removed, resulted in a retreat into a new type of barbarism. Idi Amin of Uganda was not the exception, as he headed the type of black dictatorship established right throughout Africa. The former Communist butcher of Ethiopia has sought refuge in Comrade Mugabe's Zimbabwe, a country which at the time it was known as Rhodesia was a model of racial harmony with a rising standard of living for all. The world planners and their ideological dupes swept it away as a preliminary to imposing their theories in South Africa.

Anyone with even the most elementary knowledge of South Africa and its history, is aware of the complexities of the problems confronting that country. The anti-South African ideologues, who for years have alleged that South Africa was an evil place where the whites brutally ground down the blacks, have never attempted to explain why over the years hundreds of thousands of blacks from other parts of Africa resorted to every type of subterfuge to migrate illegally into South Africa. The ideologues have never bothered to explain why, if South Africa is so oppressive, the blacks have not sought to flee the country to the "liberated" north. The reality is that it was the Europeans who created an economy which made it possible for the blacks to enjoy a rising standard of living. Chief Butheheli knows that if South African whites are subjected to the same type of "black majority rule" operating in other parts of Africa, then the main victims will be the blacks. The world-wide imposition of sanctions against South Africa, which have had the support of the African National Congress, have hurt the black Africans more than the whites. But suffering is what the Marxist-dominated African National Congress has wanted to provide it with large numbers of unemployed young blacks.

The international planners have long made it clear that Nelson Mandela, the convicted self-admitted Marxist terrorist, lucky to have escaped being hanged, and the African National Congress, are their selected tools for fitting the new South Africa into the New International Economic Order. They seek to down-play the influence of Chief Buthe and the Zulus. The Hawke Government has never extended any type of an invitation to Buthe to come to Australia to outline his views on South African affairs. During his visit to South Africa, Senator Gareth Evans clearly demonstrated that he is no statesman and that he has a blinkered view of the South African situation. It was refreshing to have Chief Buthe telling the self-opinionated Evans that he was a dangerous blunderer.

It was the ideological idiots who for years have oozed with praise for India, "the world's largest democracy". When the much abused British were responsible for ruling the whole of the Indian sub-continent, including what is now known as Pakistan and Bangladesh, a few thousand British civil servants and the army maintained law and order, with inter-communal strife kept to a minimum. The British were responsible for major economic development, including the building of railways and irrigation schemes. But such are the wonders of "orthodox finance", that when the British finally withdrew, it was claimed that they were in debt to "liberated" India. No sooner had the British withdrawn than millions died in inter-communal violence. Gandhi was assassinated, and the killing has gone on ever since. Multi-cultural India is disintegrating. A creature of the international liberal establishment, Gandhi was a moral humbug as was Nehru, constantly moralising about what was allegedly happening in South Africa or elsewhere, while presiding over an India in which there were more class distinctions and oppression than in the countries he criticised. Sir Robert Menzies made it clear he had little time for Nehru and his posterings.

Needless to say, the ideological idiots who have been loud in their praise of India will not be apologising for the nonsense they have promoted for so long. The same type of ideological idiots insisted for nearly 70 years that the Soviet Union was some type of paradise. Few have publicly apologised for trying to mislead their fellows. They were the same kind of people who said that Australia must relinquish its responsibilities in Papua-New Guinea. Every realist knew there would be disaster. Former Papua-New Guinea Prime Minister, Sir Michael Somare, now blasts the Australians for their premature withdrawal and says the country may need a dictatorship to prevent complete collapse.

The ideological idiots never appear to learn from experience, primarily because they lack the humility to admit that there are absolutes governing human affairs, and that these absolutes cannot be brushed aside with smooth ideological patter. Senator Gareth Evans is typical of his kind. Unless he is prepared to go to South Africa prepared to learn, Prime Minister Hawke would be well advised to stay in Australia. A man who believes that the African National Congress represents the great majority of blacks in South Africa is capable of believing anything.

THE HIGH COST OF MIGRATION: "Multiculturalism is costing Australia more than $7.2 billion a year. This is in addition to the $7 billion or $8 billion a year which immigration is estimated to add to the annual deficit on the current account of the balance of payments."

- The Bulletin, May 28th

The full-page report is more or less a review of a book (now published, we understand), i.e. The Cost of Multiculturalism, by Stephen Rimmer, who is "a senior economist with a government agency". He claims that the public has been provided with unsubstantiated rhetoric concerning the supposed economic benefits of multiculturalism - and no detailed information concerning economic gains, if any. He alleges covert use of ethnicity and country of origin as important criteria for the selection of migrants. League of Rights supporters do not have to be convinced of that - Asian migrants are the most favoured of all.

Mr. Rimmer alleges migrants have entered Australia, some with criminal associations, some with contagious diseases. The late Sir Raphael Cilento warned over a generation ago that imperfect immigration screenings would allow such to happen. He further alleges that the gross cost of multiculturalism amounts to something like 2% of Australia's Gross Domestic Product of $369 billion. Some items of "multicultural" expenditure are listed, viz. "welfare and crime prevention, expenditure of language training, workplace accidents due to poor communication".

We know Mr. Rimmer is correct when he alleges that "information is controlled to minimise public debate and to enable governments to hide from the public the economic costs of multiculturalism". He adds that when the multicultural lobby is faced with public opposition it either ignores the criticism or instigates a co-ordinated public attack on individual critics.

We know that!

The same is most likely to occur with respect to himself.

This is interesting! All Commonwealth Departments are required to report regularly to the Office of Multicultural Affairs about the institutionalisation of contacts with ethnic groups to ensure that they influence the policies and operation of each Government Department. These are Stephen Rimmer's own words.

Some more unfavourable facts: approximately 300,000 migrants in Australia have little or no English, and 170,000 of same are in the workforce. The Office of Multicultural Affairs, itself, states that the loss of productivity due to poor English communication among migrants in the Australian workforce is $3.2 billion.

National output lost because of migrant unemployment is estimated at $1.6 billion; unemployment benefits to be added to this figure.

Workers' compensation claims from migrants, due to poor English, costs us about $13 million yearly.

Stephen Rimmer alleges strong evidence that Australia's economic decline is due, to quite an extent, to multiculturalism.

M.P. SLAMS IMMIGRATION POLICY: As reported in The Kalgoorlie Miner (W.A.), May 18th, the Federal Member for Kalgoorlie, Mr. Graeme Campbell, fired off a few broadsides at the "multicultural lobby". Also, the Human Rights Commission, populated by "an irresponsible new class" who stifled debate on immigration by branding critics as "racist" (the same old, old, story...O.T.).

Mr. Campbell asserts that there is no actual multiculturalism in Australia, only multi-biculturalism. He explains: "The present policy is costing $7 billion and provides absolutely no benefit to Australia because it encourages people to retain their own culture". He provides as example the outcry from the Greek community when Mr. Hawke bestowed an Australian award on the Turkish President.

The Australian (June 17th) attacks multiculturalism in its Editorial of the day. It alleges that there is a bias that the "benefits" of multiculturalism are an established fact, not to be questioned at all. It mentions the "American" melting pot. Some say wonderful; we say that America is in decline because of it, and despite America's present military might. "Multiculturalism is not self-evidently good, and neither the media nor anyone else should be restrained from looking at it critically".....The truth will out.....
