THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK: "It will be seen that social democracy is an unstable combination which breaks up under pressure, and reverts to its constituent elements when the basic contradictions are exposed. Thus a Socialist regime, having won power democratically through the ballot box, sets in motion a series of social and industrial changes which are intended to be irrevocable. To do this, it has to resort, either initially or subsequently, to a programme of socialist economics, which are an unmitigated disaster wherever they have been tried.."

- James Gibb Stuart, in The Mind Benders (1978)

THE CORONATION HILL DEBACLE (from David Thompson): For an agnostic, the Prime Minister, Mr. Hawke, seems to be singularly subject to spiritual forces, particularly those of heathen origin. His sanctimonious insistence that the spiritual convictions of tribal Aborigines be respected would be laudable if it were not so obviously hypocritical. Where is his respect for the spiritual convictions of Christians who find it grossly offensive that governments force them to assist in the funding of the murder of unborn people? His respect for the "Bula" spirit at Coronation Hill, which must not be disturbed, or else sickness will afflict the people, locked the Prime Minister into an ill-considered position. His defence of his position in the Cabinet was described by some present as an "emotionally over-blown tirade..."

Irrespective of other factors, it is quite evident that the genuine interests of the Aboriginal people - the alleged reason for the political posturing - have been ignored in the end. The Jawoyn people's 'opinion' is allegedly important to Mr. Hawke. But the Jawoyn's interests were being represented by Mr. John Ah Kit - not a Jawoyn himself. We remind readers of a letter to The Australian from a genuine Jawoyn, Mr. Andy Andrews, in November last year, upon which we reported. It is most illuminating to go back to this letter, which speaks for itself:

"I have let Mr. Hawke know what myself and other Jawoyn think of mining at Coronation Hill but no answer. Attached is a list of Jawoyn who want the mine to go ahead, also a letter I sent to the Prime Minister,

"Dear Sir, I am asked every day by my people why and who is stopping the mine at Coronation to go ahead.

"My people wants jobs and a future for our families. Jawoyn continue to support mining, people like Nipper Brown, Senior Custodian, people like Sarah Flora, Phyllis Winjorroc, members of the Jawoyn Working Party, and so many other ordinary Aborigines wanting work.

"Tell me what I am supposed to say to the 140 job applicants and our Jawoyn employees if this mine is stopped. Coronation Hill project gave these people hope and a chance to learn and work and have some dignity.

"Check how many Aborigines are unemployed in Katherine and what their chances are of work. Nil, Mr. Hawke.

"It appears you only want to listen to the N.L.C. (Northern Land Council) puppets and their hangers-on who all have good paying jobs.

"On behalf of the not so radical majority of Jawoyns, we ask that the mine go ahead as promised before by your government."

(Mr. Andrews attached a list of 92 signatures under the typewritten statement, "We the undersigned Jawoyn people are in favour of the Coronation Hill project going ahead.")

The exploitation of the unfortunate aborigines takes place more at the hands of "advisers", and politically motivated manipulators than the miners. The real sickness country is not at Coronation Hill, but in that Canberra Hill, the new political palace.

DRAWING THE FANGS OF PARTY POLITICS: The final result of the N.S.W. election confirms, to Mr. Greiner's horror, that Australia's voters are tired of being treated with contempt by political parties. An arrogant Premier who was demanding that voters not only return him to office, but with a clear majority in the Legislative Council as well, or else he would call another election, is now very subdued. The Reverend Fred Nile, who with his wife Elaine and the Democrats, holds the balance of power in the Council, has ensured that Mr. Greiner is the head of a government in the minority in both Houses. We have heard no more of another election!

The composition of the Legislative Assembly gives the Coalition 49 of the 90 seats, and Mr. Greiner has done a deal with the Independent from Tamworth, Mr. Windsor, in order to govern. It is quite clear that the voters of N.S.W. have not given Mr. Greiner a mandate to do anything. The role of the Independents again becomes critical, with Mr. Nile announcing that he will be opposing the licensing of any casinos, and that he would like to see conscience voting by all M.P's.

rather than the executive imposing their will on the Caucus. This sends a shiver down the spines of the Parties - if they have spines. It is also significant that the House of Assembly Independents have included citizens initiative and referenda on their list of policies to be pursued.

THE INDEPENDENTS IN THE PARLIAMENTS: There are now minority governments in four State Parliaments who depend upon Independents for survival: N.S.W., Tasmania, South Australia and Western Australia, where two disgruntled former A.L.P. members keep Mrs. Lawrence on her toes. The political establishments, and the press, are uneasy about this. The Weekend Australian (22/6/91), in its editorial, questions the wisdom of the electorate, commenting:

"The party system developed to bring order to parliamentary democracy. Imagine trying to force legislation through any parliament made up entirely of independents...."

The underlying assumption is that more legislation is good. Last year a columnist for The Australian, Bryce Courtney, catalogued the volume of legislation that was rammed through the Federal Parliament, and expressed his disquiet. He was immediately taken to task by both the Prime Minister's Office, and by Mr. Phillip Adams, who claimed that there was little evidence to indicate that more legislation was undesirable!

However, it is not true that the party system was developed to bring order to democracy at all. Sir Arthur Bryant records the spirited resistance to the establishment of the parties in the British House of Commons only 200 years ago. The formation of the parties occurred in an environment of increasing corruption within the 'city' of London. Bryant points out that for over eight hundred years the British Parliament functioned quite well without political parties, although natural alliances were often formed. If it is impossible to "force" legislation through the Australian parliaments, because of the influence of Independents, this may well be an extremely good thing!
(End of David Thompson comment)

MALCOLM ROSS: In a recent report, Mr. Doug Christie, the outstanding Canadian barrister who has represented a number of Canadians prosecuted under the Canadian "hate law", points out that "There is a move afoot to remove Section 3(b) from the hate law so as to remove the defence of an honest religious belief. This step will in all probability enable charges to be laid criminally against Malcolm Ross". Ross is the New Brunswick schoolteacher being persecuted by the Zionist mafia because of his books. Ross has never aired his views in the school where he teaches.

Doug Christie is the man who in the two Zundel cases has brilliantly exposed the Zionist propagandists. He successfully defended the Hungarian, Finta, the first Canadian to be charged under Canadian War Crimes legislation. As yet the High Court of Australia has not ruled on the question of the Australian War Crimes legislation, which means that the Adelaide case cannot proceed. Australians should heed carefully what is happening in Canada, because the same tactics could be employed against Australians.

The background to the Malcolm Ross case is outlined in Ross's major work, The Spectre of Power, price $16.00 from all League addresses.

BRIEF COMMENT: The Australian (June 24th) reports that Canadian Judge James Chadwick has blocked the prosecution of Michael Pawlowski (aged 74) who has been accused of murdering 490 Poles and Jews during World War 2. He refused to allow special commission travel to the Soviet Union to gather evidence against Pawlowski. Mr. Sol Littman, of the Simon Wiesenthal Centre, is upset. The Canadian Justice Minister, Mr. Kim Campbell, is upset too.

FROM NEW ZEALAND "ON TARGET" (June 14th, 1991) - Bill Daly (National Director N.Z.L.R.) comments: ".....The disorder and utter nonsense now seen everywhere is merely proof that without reference to a higher authority human beings simply become mad. Much of the madness today can only be described as diabolical. How else do we explain the behaviour of someone who will protest against the killing of whales, seals, or some other virtually unknown species of animal or insect, but condones or even advocates the legal execution of some of next year's one-year-old children? How do we explain the new religion called conservation that has the body waste from humans flown out of the bush by helicopter in order to preserve the natural environment? How do we explain priests and bishops supporting a conference to discuss ways of making practising homosexuals feel part of the 'Church'? How do we explain government policies that often make it more difficult economically for a married couple to raise children, than a solo parent? How else do we explain how a whole society can claim it is poor because it is short of money or has astronomical money debt (ink on paper or computer blips), while surrounded by an abundance of natural wealth?

A priest or minister of the 'old school' would have had no hesitation in replying that these human and social defects are a result of what was called original sin, and that without the constant Grace of God, and of minds directed upwards, then man automatically 'falls'. One Christian Catechism for children used to begin with the question: 'Who made me?', followed by, 'Why did God make me?' Whatever one's personal views, no honest person can deny that this approach, and the answer to the second question (God made me to know, love and serve Him in this life and be happy with Him in the next), did produce, in the main, a more mature, responsible and stable adult than today's diet of soapies, rock music, sex education, etc., that the poor kids are now fed - not to mention the tragedy of broken homes.

The Mills of God: The old saying, a legacy from an age when there was more commonsense, that the mills of God grind slowly but very finely, was never more apt than today. Today's chaos is simply proof of the existence of the higher authority of God. The great hope must be that today's disasters will eventually force increasing numbers of people to reassess the direction in which they are going. It may even be that the clergy will come to their senses and regain some courage - and that will certainly be cause for celebration!
