THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK: ".... the aim of an economic regime is not to increase production for production's sake, nor, to increase capital, ... its aim should be to make it possible for man to dwell on this earth in ease, in harmony and brotherhood."

- Towards a Truly Christian Society,
by French Christian Philosopher, Daniel Rops

WORLD PLANNERS VERSUS REALITY by Eric D. Butler:

It is one thing for theorists to prepare grandiose schemes for re-shaping the world towards some type of New World Order. But reality remains the great disciplinarian in human affairs. It seems only yesterday that Time magazine's "man of the decade", Mikhail Gorbachev, was seen in the West as a "man of the future". Margaret Thatcher summarised the West's view with her famous statement, "We can do business with Gorbachev." Only last July President George Bush was having what now can be seen to have been a completely pointless summit with Gorbachev. Any authority Gorbachev had left was completely eroded by the failed coup. The massive independence vote by the Ukrainians was striking confirming that Gorbachev's hope of holding at least part of the old Soviet Union together was but wishful thinking. Even now Western politicians appear to be finding it hard to come to terms with the reality of the post-Gorbachev era. The man whom the internationalists felt could bring a "reformed" Soviet Union into the New World Order has been destroyed by reality, one of these being the upsurge of nationalism as the Soviet Empire disintegrated, the only thing uniting the different ethnic groups being their hatred of Communism. Ethnic divisions are worsening as the former Soviet Empire disintegrates.

The ideal of multiracialism and multiculturalism is coming under mounting pressure everywhere, including the U.S.A. Domestic realities are overtaking the hero of the Gulf War, President George Bush. The deepening economic crisis is intensifying long pent-up feelings among white middle class Americans to the effect that forced integration in the school system, affirmative action, and civil rights programmes have been discriminating against them and their future. The emergence of David Duke as a major political figure has dramatically demonstrated that middle class Americans are in revolt against all aspects of the liberal society. President Bush, who expressed horror at the prospect of David Duke becoming a State Governor, has not heard the last of Duke, who has announced that he is going to run for the Presidency on the same platform on which he ran in the recent State election. Bush and his supporters have expressed relief that Duke, constantly described as a "racist" and a "neo-Nazi" only polled 40% of the total vote. But Duke polled 55% of the white vote. Extended on a national scale, that type of vote could prove most embarrassing for President Bush.

Duke is an interesting political phenomenon at the present time. During the only time the writer has met him, at a Seminar in Atlanta, Duke, who is most articulate, said that he now regretted some of the views he had expressed in his youth. It is interesting that former Communists who have repudiated views they once held, are generally not treated as political pariahs. Even Communists whose hands are dripping with blood, like the Chinese Communist leaders, are acceptable to President George Bush. It is not Duke's alleged past which is haunting President Bush and his supporters, but the conservative views being expressed by Duke. Duke is not expressing any hatred of Negroes and non-European ethnic groups in the U.S.A. He is objecting to unfair policies which penalise large numbers of white Americans.

Also haunting President George Bush and his "New World Order" supporters is the expressed intention of the distinguished American writer, Patrick Buchanan, to contest the Presidency as a Republican. Buchanan was speech writer for President Reagan and frankly admits that at one time he was strongly pro-Israel. But all this changed with Israel's infamous invasion of Lebanon and other aggressive policies. Buchanan was a strong critic of Bush's involvement in the Gulf War, bluntly stating that the American intervention could only prove disastrous for the U.S.A. with the only beneficiary being Zionist Israel. Buchanan was bitterly attacked by the Zionist lobby. Buchanan is running on what is virtually an isolationist policy and protection for American industries. The Duke-Buchanan challenge to Bush, while probably not sufficient to deny him the Republican nomination, will certainly cool Bush's ardour for "The New World Order".

While the multicultural Yugoslavia continues to destroy itself in bitter civil war, the planners attempting to create the Western European Federal State are faced with increasing tensions inside the European Economic nations. There is not only the problem of forcing the reluctant British to surrender more of their sovereignty, but the mounting immigration problems as non-Europeans flood into all parts of Western Europe. A headline from the London paper, The Daily Telegraph, reads, "SHADOWS OF THE RIGHT OVER EUROPE". With the world-wide economic depression deepening, and chaos threatening in many parts of the world, this is the time for Australians to turn their backs on multiculturalism and "New Economic Order" theories, and take the opportunity of putting their own house in order. Australia's problems are still far less than those in many other parts of the world.

KEATING WAITS HIS TURN: As we have consistently predicted, Paul Keating has never forgone his intention to take the leadership of the Federal Labor Party, and become Prime Minister, at the earliest opportunity. He was aware that events were running against Prime Minister Hawke. Ironically, the hapless John Kerin was sacked because he could not successfully defend the policies which he had inherited from his predecessor, Paul Keating. What Australia requires are new and constructive policies, not new Treasurers. Ralph Willis may be more aggressive than John Kerin, but only basic policy changes can now save the Hawke Government. We would not be surprised if a desperate Labor Caucus does not demand Hawke's immediate resignation.

But what if Keating assumes the leadership? Nothing surprises us about power-hungry politicians. It will be recalled that before the first Hawke Government was elected in 1983, Paul Keating was against the de-regulation of the banking system and the entry of foreign banks into Australia. He found no difficulty in changing his views once in office. It should also be recalled that Keating was a strong advocate of the introduction of a consumption tax, only being beaten off by sufficient resistance within the Labor movement. If elected to become Prime Minister, Keating is capable of saying that the severity of the depression he said "we had to have", was much greater than he had intended and that he now proposes to rectify the situation by some policy changes. We would not be surprised in the slightest to have Paul Keating taking part of the Hewson taxation programme and presenting it as his own.

The real test of a Keating Government's programme would be its attitude towards internationalising the Australian economy. There is an increasing challenge to the internationalist dogma, particularly in Victoria, where the biggest percentage of Australian manufacturing industry is located. The abandonment of protection policies in favour of "the level playing field" theory, has added to the woes of the Kirner State Government. Federal anti-protection policies came under a scathing attack last week from Victorian Minister David White, while sections of industry along with sections of the State Liberal Party are tending to come together in opposition to Canberra and the Federal Treasury. What is now developing in Victoria is a grassroots rejection of current policies of internationalism. One of the arch priests of these policies of internationalism is Senator Button. If Keating becomes Prime Minister, what he does with Button will be an indication of whether there are to be any major policy changes.

BRIEF COMMENTS: While Australian taxpayers will contribute millions towards a war crimes trial which is a complete travesty of justice, those responsible for these trials are the Zionist power groups, Zionist Israel continues to hold in prison John Demjanjuk in spite of the fact that Soviet evidence has now confirmed that Demjanjuk was not the man known as "Ivan The Terrible". American writer Patrick Buchanan, in an article to be published in the December issue of The Intelligence Survey, claims that the Israelis are hoping that Demjanjuk will die in prison and that an admission of error can be made later with a minimum of embarrassment.

In the mass of material on the Pearl Harbour affair there have been a few admissions that Japan's intentions to attack Pearl Harbour were known to Prime Minister Winston Churchill, and probably to President Roosevelt, but that in order to bring the U.S.A. into the Second World War, the American forces were sacrificed. But there have been no references that we have seen, to the American policies which destroyed the moderate, pro-Western government of Prince Konoye and brought the militarists to power. This matter is dealt with by Eric Butler in his work, The Red Pattern of World Conquest ($9.00 posted from all League bookshops).
