THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK: "I do not expect you to agree with me, but I believe that the most urgent need for Western man is to re-discover that divine element in his being, without which there never can be any possible hope or meaning to our existence in the Earthly realm."

- Prince Charles in an address to the Royal College of Psychiatrists, published in The People's Prince

DAVID IRVING DELIVERS MAJOR ANTI-ZIONIST BLOW: British historian David Irving has done it again: he has received world-wide publicity because of the discovery in Moscow of The Goebbels Diaries. There is no argument that the Goebbels Diaries are authentic and that Irving has used his intimate knowledge of Nazi documents to persuade the London Sunday Times to pay him a substantial sum of money to transcribe and edit the diaries. It appears that Irving had known of the existence of The Goebbels Diaries for some time. Irving was the man who denounced the alleged Hitler Diaries as forgeries at a time when the Sunday Times was serialising them! Whatever the Sunday Times thinks of David Irving, the reality is that the discovery of the Goebbels Diaries is a major event with the man second to Hitler providing a first hand picture of what was happening in Hitler's Germany. And driven by financial considerations, The Times decided they must use the expertise of David Irving in order not to miss out on a major scoop.

But the Zionists are outraged and there have been Jewish protests from right around the world, with large numbers of Jews demonstrating outside the headquarters of the Sunday Times in London. What clearly is feared is that with the break up of the Soviet Union and writers of the calibre of David Irving now being able to gain access to K.G.B. and other sources of information inside Russia, Zionist propagandists are going to find it increasingly difficult to sustain some generally accepted Zionist-promoted myths. Irving has already drawn attention to Russian sources showing that the alleged "holocaust" at Auschwitz was fabricated. But the Goebbels Diaries must be rated as an historical blockbuster with one commentator observing that many historians are already nervously poised before their word processors as they prepare to re-write history.

Already two major facts have emerged from the Goebbels Dairies: Hitler virtually "stumbled" into war because he was led to believe that the British would not fight. The diaries confirm the view of even mainstream historian A.J. Taylor that Hitler did not deliberately plan a world war. Taylor was strongly criticised for his work. And the Goebbels Diaries also confirm the view of those who said that Neville Chamberlain was a weak man unable to stand up to Hitler at the much-publicised Munich Conference of 1938. The Zionist propoganda machine turned its full venom on Chamberlain because he was not prepared to go to war in 1938 when Britain was still only in the early stages of a rearmament programme initiated by the Chamberlain Government.

The most revealing development of the publicity for David Irving concerning the Goebbels Diaries is the reaction of the mainstream historians in the Universities. The Australian of July 8th quotes a number of these. Although many of the historians contacted by The Australian acknowledged Irving's expertise in the field of documentation relating to Hitler's Germany, "they argue that quite apart from the political and historical opinions he (Irving) expresses, Irving is not a trained scholar and that despite his mastery of the sources, he cannot be considered a serious historian". The truth is that most of the academics are politically biased and they also are jealous of an "outsider" discovering and revealing primary documentary source material they knew nothing about. As Irving correctly says, most of the academics merely promote one another and repeat one another's mistakes.

As demonstrated in the new updated and revised edition of his major work, Hitler's War, Irving has always demonstrated his complete integrity and willingness to correct his own work in the light of new documentation. Irving originally was neutral concerning the Jewish "Holocaust", but when confronted with the Leuchter Report concerning Auschwitz and other information, came to the conclusion, and said so, that the "Holocaust" was a gigantic hoax. Irving expresses the view that the "Holocaust" will eventually be "completely discredited".

Irving's academic critics claim that while Irving has an audience "among non-professional readers of history", he is not accepted by the professional historians, mainly because of his association with "extreme right-wing groups". Irving makes no secret of the fact that he is a traditional conservative. As C.H. Douglas pointed out, real history is not merely what is written about a series of events, but what emerges in policies. All policies are rooted in philosophies and no real assessment of history is possible without examining undergirding philosophies. Irrespective of what Irving's critics say, he is providing the documentation which makes it possible to present real history. David Irving is essential reading for those genuinely concerned about truth. The Zionists fear that truth.

ASSESSING THE QUEENSLAND POLITICAL SCENE by Tony Symonds, Queensland State League of Rights Director:

The Goss administration has made preferential voting optional. This must mean some electoral advantage to the Government, or it would not have happened. At the last elections, the A.L.P. topped the first preference vote in 69 of the 89 seats. They lost 15 of them after distribution of preferences, leaving them 54 seats. Only in 11 of these did they need preferences to win. They won 43 outright.

On the other hand, the Liberals won 8 of their 9 seats on National Party preferences. The National Party won 13 of their 26 seats on Liberal preferences, another 6 on Independent preferences.

This means that if at the next State elections, the Liberal and National Party voters take it into their heads not to allocate second preference votes, Labor will score handsomely. It would appear that the Queensland Conservative Parties will need to watch their backs. Even allowing for a natural slump in the Labor Party vote, the Conservatives will need either to urge their supporters to allocate a second preference vote, or cease three corner contests. Further, they would be well advised to look kindly on strong Independent candidates.

CANADIAN WARNING ON G.S.T.: Visiting Canadian tax expert, Professor Neil Brooks of York University in Toronto, says he is amazed that small businesses in Australia were calling for a goods and services tax when their counterparts in Canada had suffered a devastating impact from its introduction 18 months ago. Polls revealed that 71% of Canadians now want the tax repealed. Canadian Opposition Parties have pledged to repeal the tax after the next elections. In a criticism of Dr. John Hewson's Fight Back package, Professor Brooks said that its effect would be to shift the tax burden from large to small firms, from high income earners to lower income earners and from men to women. The Canadian experience confirms that of New Zealand, where the G.S.T. has helped to polarise society.

BRIEF COMMENTS: The National Farmers' Federation, which has badly advised and failed to defend Australia's rural industries against the financial policies which have decimated Australia's primary producers, has now officially endorsed the Federal Opposition's "Fight Back" programme, which includes the proposed General Services Tax. We are not surprised. Primary producers might recall that the N.F.F. was a strong supporter of the de-regulation of the Australian banking system, allowing foreign banks to establish themselves in Australia. It was claimed that this policy would provide primary producers with better services, more competition and lower interest rates. The N.F.F. has supported the anti-tariff policy which has been a major factor in the destruction of Australian industries, both primary and secondary. There is nothing in the Opposition's "Fight Back" programme which addresses itself to the basic cause of Australia's present disastrous state.

The N.F.F. has constantly claimed that Australia's farmers must pin their faith in negotiations through the General Agreement on Trade (GATT). Have they noticed that the long drawn-out negotiations have still reached no finality? Australia's representatives are participating in a costly and futile pantomime.

As we have often stressed, all forms of monopoly are anti-social. The trade union monopoly is one example, but while it is easy to point to the evils which flow from this monopoly, as it is to point to the evils associated with other monopolies, the "economic rationalists" claim that the trade union monopoly is the source of most of Australia's economic problems. This is a superficial and dangerous view, completely ignoring basic causes. The power of all forms of monopoly is eroded if financial and economic policies decentralise power and place the individual in the position where that individual is economically secure and can make decisions for himself. Some of the much-publicised "go slow" work practices stem from the fear that greater real efficiency would deprive wage earners of their jobs and their incomes. If men are not required for economic activities, then the simplest thing to do is to pay them a "social dividend".

It was master Marxist strategist Lenin who said that one of the basic requirements for a completely socialised State was a centralised State control led electricity grid, with all dependent on one centralised source of electric power. This was one of the major features of Prime Minister Paul Keating's One Nation statement made back on February 26th, a completely centralised electricity grid system for the whole of Eastern Australia. This allegedly will make the generation and distribution of electricity "more efficient". The States have not been over-enthusiastic, but Keating continues to adhere to his strategy.
