THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK: "The core of the pre-(Second World)war was the private income '- the possession of adequate purchasing-power not subject either to governmental interference, not terminable by loss of employment. 'Private incomes' were decreasing rapidly in number, but were still considerable. The fundamental object of the so-called New Order is the abolition of all purchasing-power which is not granted 'upon terms', and revocable at any time, thus making 'employment' controlled by the international cartels, a world government.'" — C.H. Douglas in The Brief For The Prosecution (1945)

THE ZIONIST REVOLUTIONARIES SHOW THEIR HAND: Violent demonstrations, and the threat of a bomb at the Melbourne Sheraton Hotel, prevented the planned national showing of David Irving's video film "The Search for Truth in History", in Melbourne, Sydney and Brisbane last week. The Victorian police, who were obviously well informed of the planned violent demonstration in Melbourne, recommended that the Sheraton Hotel cancel the showing of the Irving film. As we go to press, representatives of Veritas Publishing Co. Pty. Ltd., David Irving's Australian representatives, announce that planned film showings at Albury, N.S.W., and Shepparton, Victoria, have also had to be cancelled, although plans were being made to secure alternative venues. Although alternative venues were obtained in Adelaide and Perth, this resulted in organisation problems which affected attendances. But the overall result, thanks to the nation-wide publicity, was a massive surge of requests for the Irving film. The media quoted the Veritas manager as saying that demand for the film had soared to over 1,000. "We had to get in more stocks to keep up with it all."

Tremendous pressure was applied to the Office of Film and Literature Classification to refuse to give permission for the film to be shown, one report stating that the Board had received hundreds of phone calls. It was only late on Wednesday of last week, the 19th, that the news came through that a majority had ruled that the film be classified for general showing. But a number wanted only a restricted showing, while one voted against the film being shown at all. It would be instructive to know who this person is. However, the fact that the Film Censorship Board gave the Irving film a general rating, containing "no material that would harm or distress" children, did not halt the Zionist-inspired campaign against David Irving, who continued to insist that he should not be seen or heard.

With breathtaking effrontery, Zionist leaders claimed that they had nothing whatever to do with the campaign of violence, or the banning of Irving, in spite of the fact they are on record as having been the prime movers early this year of having Irving banned from Australia. Not without significance was the fact that the mindless chanting of the protestors in Melbourne repeated the false allegation that David Irving was a "Nazi". One of the ugliest aspects of the Melbourne demonstration was the march on the offices of the League, the demonstrators chanting "smash the League of Rights". Only a strong police force prevented damage being done to the office, which was left daubed with a Swastika. Advisory National Director Eric Butler had only a few minutes to vacate and lock the League office, advised by the police that it might be dangerous to stay, before the demonstrators arrived.

The League has said that David Irving should not only be allowed into Australia, but that his carefully documented case disputing the general picture of the "Holocaust", with millions of Jews being systematically gassed to death, should be discussed and debated rationally. The League has taken the trouble to view the Irving tape and feels that it should be seen. For this reason it has purchased a supply of the film and is making it available to those who wish to see it. This service will continue until stocks are exhausted. The video film sells for $35 posted from all League addresses. The audio tape sells for $10 posted. No serious student of modern history can ignore Irving's great classic, Hitler's War, completely updated with a brilliant Introduction, and the use of many photos not previously published. Hitler's War sells for $65 posted.

The latest developments in the David Irving saga are bringing to the public attention the reality about Australian politics. It will be revealing to see how the Federal politicians attempt to justify banning David Irving now that the Film Board has ruled that the Irving film is suitable for general viewing. Are there any Federal politicians "game" enough to view the Irving film and then to state publicly their reactions?

If it is claimed that the presence of David Irving in Australia would lead to further protests and rioting, and that for this reason he should not be allowed to enter, this would be tantamount to an open admission that a small minority, reacting to Zionist claims, are running Australia. And this would make a complete mockery of Prime Minister Keating's boasts about Australian 'independence'.

REVELATIONS OF AUSCHWITZ SURVIVOR: When the League of Rights heard that the Melbourne David Irving meeting was to be cancelled, League officials took quick action to obtain a small hall to which known League or Rights supporters could be quietly directed. Some had come from country areas. Approximately 30 League of Rights supporters gathered to hear Advisory National Director Eric Butler report on what was happening. At question time there was a dramatic incident when an elderly lady made a statement concerning Auschwitz. She had been an inmate of Auschwitz, taken there as a young girl. She explained what happened to all those being brought in by train. Because of the deadly typhoid problem, with hair covered in lice, all those arriving had their hair completely shaved off, their clothes taken from them, and given steam baths, after which they were provided with fresh clothing. They were then allocated to the various parts of the Auschwitz industrial complex where they were required to perform different kinds of work. There were no gas chambers and Jews were not treated any worse than others. Large numbers of non-Jews were used by the Germans to help provide labour for their industrial machine. At the conclusion of the woman's moving testimony to the truth, those present involuntarily gave her an ovation.

BRIEF COMMENTS: We are not dedicated admirers of Terry Lane, well-known ABC radio interviewer and commentator, who, as far as we know, has never said a kind thing about the League of Rights. But the former Church of Christ minister has what we would regard as the right kind of enemies. Writing in The Australian Magazine of May 22nd-23rd, Gary Hughes says, "Those who line up against him will tell you he is a racist, bigot, male chauvenist, anti-Semite, that he abuses his position as a broadcaster to publicly pedal his distorted views." One of Lane's critics is Federal Labor politician, Dr. Andrew Theophanous, who has clashed with Lane on multiculturalism. But a most revealing comment is provided by Dr. Colin Rubenstein of Australia-Israel Publications: "He's taken some bizarre positions on Israel, multiculturalism, Jews, David Irving, Hitler and World War II." According to Hughes, groups and individuals within the Jewish community have "compiled bulky files on him".

Writing in The Canberra Times of May 6th, Bailey Morris of The Independent, UK, provides a fascinating insight into the activities of the International Monetary Fund as it strives to further the programme of the New World Order. Morris comments on the role of Michel Camdessus, a French Central Banker, who is becoming "an aggressive force in international policy making. As head of the lead agency managing the West's RUS43 billion ... Russian rescue programme, he has been placed in a hot spot and has accepted the challenge. Even the IMF's biggest donor countries - the United States, Japan, Germany, France, Britain and others - have not escaped ringing exhortations to get their own economic houses in order." The IMF Interim Committee has been busy discussing the "new global economic agenda and the IMF's role in shaping it". The IMF is playing a major role in the "restructuring" of Russia and there will be no less than 828 IMF staff visits in 1993 alone. Camdessus sees the IMF virtually as the dictators of the policies of the seven (the G7) industrial nations, forcing them to link their economies with the less developed nations. Camdessus is the seventh managing director of the IMF and clearly is a strong internationalist.

Although he did not look too comfortable, Prime Minister Paul Keating accepted the traditional way of greeting Maories while in New Zealand, rubbing noses with them, as does the Queen when she visits New Zealand. But the same Paul Keating refused to have his wife give the Queen the traditional curtsy when she visited Australia last, thus demonstrating his vulgar bad manners.

AUSTRALIANS CAUGHT BY INTERNATIONAL LAW: The encroachment of international law upon Australian sovereignty proceeds almost unnoticed, until specific cases come before the courts. When this occurs, Australian authorities almost universally defer to "international law". A recent case of child custody, in which a woman (Australian) left her American husband and brought her two children back to Australia, invoked the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction. Irrespective of the merits of the particular case, it appears that the Australian woman, who is prevented from working in America under US immigration law, must now surrender her children. Her comment: "As soon as this convention was invoked, everyone, including the Federal Attorney-General's Department, just put their arms in the air, and said 'there's nothing we can do; our hands are tied.'"

In April, another case concerned an Australian extradition treaty with the Phillipines, under which an Australian couple have spent over a year in north Queensland jails awaiting a decision by Australian courts on a Phillipino extradition request. The two were accused of murder, and it appears that under the extradition treaty, they could be sent to the Phillipines to stand trial without any evidence presented in Australian courts first. Thus, in the absence of a prima facie case, Australians can be sent to face courts where standards of evidence would not satisfy Australian courts. George Orwell's international state, in some respects, is already here.
