

ON TARGET

- NEWS HIGHLIGHTS
- BACKGROUND INFORMATION
- COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

The price of Freedom is eternal vigilance –

Print Post Publication Number 381667 00258

Vol.31, No.47

December 8th, 1995

THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK: "Graeme Campbell is a victim of multiculturalism – the intolerance that cunningly masquerades as tolerance."

– Terry Lane, Sunday Age (Melbourne), December 3rd

THE GRAEME CAMPBELL EXPLOSION by Eric D. Butler:

Last week saw the long running drama concerning West Australian Labor M.P., Graeme Campbell, come to a head, with Campbell being stripped of his Labor Party nomination for the electorate of Kalgoorlie, the biggest in the democratic world, and in effect being expelled from the Federal Labor Caucus. However, having been elected – with an overwhelming majority – by the electors of Kalgoorlie at the last Federal Elections, he cannot be expelled from Parliament. He will continue to sit in the Parliament as an Independent and has announced that he will re-contest his electorate as an Independent. However, a close examination of Campbell's statements indicates that as yet it is far from certain that Campbell will, in fact, run as an Independent for Kalgoorlie. As a skilled grassroots politician he must be well aware that, assuming he were re-elected, his scope for effective national action would be limited as a private Member in a Parliament which he anticipates will see a John Howard Government. It can, however, be safely assumed that irrespective of whether he stays with the House of Representatives, or moves to the Senate, he has a national strategy planned. One thing is certain: he has dramatically changed the course of Australian politics.

No mature political observer denies the potent Zionist factor in Australian politics in recent years. For many years the Zionist propaganda machine has conducted a persistent campaign against the League of Rights, attempting to act whenever they feared the growth of League influence. It was Zionist influence which prevented the Hawke Government from granting a visa to the British historian David Irving. It was Zionist influence which was responsible for the threats and ugly demonstrations which prevented the showing in a number of centres of David Irving's video film, The Search for Truth in History. The Zionists were the driving force behind the campaign to have war crime trials conducted. They also exerted every possible influence to have the Race Hatred legislation passed. When the news was announced in 1993 that Graeme Campbell had agreed to appear on a League of Rights platform, the Zionist machine went into immediate action with attempts to intimidate Campbell. Instead of retreating as many politicians have, Campbell went on the attack. From then on he was a marked man. It was when he appeared once again on a League platform, at this year's Queensland State Seminar, along with Denis McCormack of the Australians Against Further Immigration Party, that the Zionist campaign against Campbell really exploded. Zionist leaders demanded that the A.L.P. expel Campbell. But the problem was, could the A.L.P. afford such a drastic move in the run-up to a Federal Election? It was Campbell alone who had won Kalgoorlie for Labor and then built it into one of the safest Labor electorates in Australia. Sacking Campbell could mean the loss of a vital seat.

Keating's hand was forced when maintaining his firm support for the Australians Against Further Immigration, Campbell appeared on the A.A.F.I. platform at what was described as a launch of the Party's Federal election campaign in Sydney. Campbell followed up with a scathing attack on the current immigration policy and multiculturalism in the Federal Parliament. It was at this stage that the Zionist hit men moved in and Keating obviously felt he had no other option than to call for Campbell's expulsion. It is instructive to look at the reaction of all the well-known Zionist front men. Gerard Henderson of The Age and Sydney Morning Herald. League-watcher David Greason raised the alarm concerning the possibility of Campbell and others obtaining a foothold in the Senate. The Age editorial of last Friday applauded the expulsion of Campbell, once again stressing his association with the League of Rights.

The political commentators had a field day last weekend, scribbling away. A classic but not surprising article by the foreign editor of The Australian, Greg Sheridan, appeared in The Weekend Australian, December 2nd-3rd. The article was smugly entitled A.L.P. MOVE AN ACT OF DECENCY. Sheridan's view was that Campbell should have been removed five years earlier. Campbell's crime was that he had associated with the "odious, fringe dwellers", Australians Against Further Immigration and the "anti-Semitic", Racist League of Rights. But the central point made by Sheridan was that Campbell was challenging the policy of non-discrimination against Asians and Aborigines. Sheridan conveniently overlooks the fact that Campbell has widespread support among his Aboriginal electors and support from some Asian leaders.

As yet Campbell has not clearly defined his strategy for the future. But it is certain that the events of last week have dramatically changed the face of Australian politics. An historical development of the most far reaching significance has taken place. The League of Rights is poised to play a major role in the unfolding drama.

BASIC FUND NOW URGENT: The dramatic unfolding of political events, with the next Federal Elections possibly only four months away, makes it imperative that the League is not short of essential funds. A minority of supporters has been magnificent in making available $46,946. The Basic Fund target of $60,000 is now well within sight. Let's have a major effort before Christmas. All donations to Box 1052J, G.P.O., Melbourne, 3001.

BRIEF COMMENTS:

Since Eric Butler wrote the foregoing assessment of the Campbell factor in Australian politics, Campbell has indicated the type of strategy he is going to pursue. Along with other commentators, we have reservations about the wisdom of attempting to get himself re-elected in Kalgoorlie. As former Democrat leader Don Chipp points out, to be completely certain of winning, he must poll at least 50 percent plus to be certain. If he has to rely on preferences, he would be struggling. It is difficult to visualise the Liberal and National Parties giving him their preferences in the present climate. But Campbell's strategy of concentrating on support for Senate candidates who support him, is sound. We have persistently said that the future of Australia depends upon the Senate. It may prove, of course, that Graeme Campbell, a man well known for his deep sense of loyalty, could take sufficient of the Labor vote in Kalgoorlie to perform a political miracle. Perhaps Graeme Campbell's theme song for the elections should be Scotland the Brave. No one can dispute Graeme Campbell's courage.

* * * * *

It is not surprising that John Howard continues to slip in the polls concerning the electors' perception of leadership qualities. John Howard continues to try to be all things to all men. We do not belong to that school of political thought which says that it is certain that the Coalition will win the Federal elections, as long as John Howard maintains his present bland approach and presents few concrete policies. John Howard continues to urge Australians to trust him and the Coalition. All the evidence indicates that the majority of Australian people at present have no real faith in any politicians. Graeme Campbell is moving into a very vulnerable area for all party politicians with his declared support for the concept of the Citizens' Initiative Referendum and Recall mechanism. Campbell correctly says that the first step towards restoring trust in the Australian political system is for the politicians to indicate they trust the people by offering C.I.R.

At the present critical moment in Australian history, we can make no better constructive suggestion to our readers than to obtain and widely circulate Graeme Campbell's magnificent address, The Struggle For True Australian Independence, at the University of New England Last year. This address is a synthesis of Campbell's thinking on a wide variety of issues, ranging from multiculturalism to "economic rationalism". Available from all League addresses, $5 posted.

* * * * *

Once again The Democrats have demonstrated that while they want to ensure that the system of Proportional Representation remains, purely for reasons of political survival, they want to seriously weaken the constitutional power of the Senate to stall or block Supply. John Howard has said that a Howard Coalition Government would never block Supply. In effect this means that a government could pursue whatever draconian policy it liked without any check. To their credit, the Greens, who played a vital role in preventing the imposition of the Zionist-inspired hate bill, state that they reserve the right to block Supply in "exceptional circumstances". The Coalition is divided on the question.

ON TARGET

- NEWS HIGHLIGHTS
- BACKGROUND INFORMATION
- COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

The price of Freedom is eternal vigilance –

Print Post Publication Number 381667 00258

Vol.31, No.47

December 8th, 1995

THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK: "Graeme Campbell is a victim of multiculturalism – the intolerance that cunningly masquerades as tolerance."

– Terry Lane, Sunday Age (Melbourne), December 3rd

THE GRAEME CAMPBELL EXPLOSION by Eric D. Butler:

Last week saw the long running drama concerning West Australian Labor M.P., Graeme Campbell, come to a head, with Campbell being stripped of his Labor Party nomination for the electorate of Kalgoorlie, the biggest in the democratic world, and in effect being expelled from the Federal Labor Caucus. However, having been elected – with an overwhelming majority – by the electors of Kalgoorlie at the last Federal Elections, he cannot be expelled from Parliament. He will continue to sit in the Parliament as an Independent and has announced that he will re-contest his electorate as an Independent. However, a close examination of Campbell's statements indicates that as yet it is far from certain that Campbell will, in fact, run as an Independent for Kalgoorlie. As a skilled grassroots politician he must be well aware that, assuming he were re-elected, his scope for effective national action would be limited as a private Member in a Parliament which he anticipates will see a John Howard Government. It can, however, be safely assumed that irrespective of whether he stays with the House of Representatives, or moves to the Senate, he has a national strategy planned. One thing is certain: he has dramatically changed the course of Australian politics.

No mature political observer denies the potent Zionist factor in Australian politics in recent years. For many years the Zionist propaganda machine has conducted a persistent campaign against the League of Rights, attempting to act whenever they feared the growth of League influence. It was Zionist influence which prevented the Hawke Government from granting a visa to the British historian David Irving. It was Zionist influence which was responsible for the threats and ugly demonstrations which prevented the showing in a number of centres of David Irving's video film, The Search for Truth in History. The Zionists were the driving force behind the campaign to have war crime trials conducted. They also exerted every possible influence to have the Race Hatred legislation passed. When the news was announced in 1993 that Graeme Campbell had agreed to appear on a League of Rights platform, the Zionist machine went into immediate action with attempts to intimidate Campbell. Instead of retreating as many politicians have, Campbell