THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK: "It is the power that ceaselessly disseminates a degenerate mass culture throughout the world, perverting and destroying every local custom and tradition; that exploits every natural resource to meet the demand it perpetually creates for new and superfluous machines and luxuries; tears up with mad, mechanical glee the vestiges of ancient nations; aspires to plan and control the whole world's food supply and rule everything by the power of imaginary money. We may call that power 'America' or the 'New World Order' or the 'International Community' or what we please. An ancient name for it is the 'Empire of Mammon'."

– Peter Simple, Daily Telegraph, April 30th, 1999

THE G.S.T. – PHASE TWO by Jeremy Lee:

We are now entering what could be called Phase Two of the taxation struggle. The Howard/Costello taxare horribilis is up and running. The whole strategy, which is international in design, must now create the illusion that it was all a storm in a teacup; that Australians, once they discover how easy and simple it really all is, will soon settle down and even rejoice in the many benefits yet to come.

It is doubtful if even Howard and Costello really believe this, although the capacity of the high-and-mighty to misread popular feeling is legendary. But there are clear signs of social engineering in the events since July 1st, not least of which was the Newspann showing a sudden surge of support for Howard and the G.S.T.

The poll was held long before the pain sets in, and at the very moment when there was national relief we would be spared further arm-twisting, with its nauseating "Unchain-my-heart" advertisements.

The millions of Australians who signed their names in opposition to the G.S.T. have not gone away or changed their minds. Some will try to make the best of a bad job, accepting what they see as inevitable. But in the Australian heart there is an invincible anger at the way constitutional principles have been flouted and democratic representation neutralised.

A hard road lies ahead. The funding shortfalls facing the Howard government are daunting. Some $100 billion is required to make Australia's defence system effective; there is a backlog of about $130 billion in maintenance for Local Government works and infrastructure; an estimated $60 billion is required to tackle the country's salinity crisis; roads are deteriorating; the public hospital system is in crisis; and behind all this is a wage structure set to explode as incomes in real terms have been eroded over a number of years and the G.S.T. price rises lock in. Reith is desperate to get his individual wage-contracts legislation through before the unions can re-gather enough muscle to declare war on employers.

And behind all this is the ever-increasing foreign debt – now a net $255 billion – and the ever-increasing quarterly Current-Account-Deficit.

Add to this the million or so small businesses whose paper-work has been vastly increased and who have been ordered to collect taxes from their fellows without pay, and you have the ingredients for a social disaster.

If it is too compromised and beholden to the banks and multinationals to use the national credit for rehabilitating Australia by use of our constitutional provision to fund Australia's needs, the Howard Government can only continue to hand to foreign interests every area that requires funding, selling the nation in the process.

Nor does Beazley and Labor offer any alternative. Beazley could do worse than take a leaf from wartime Prime Minister John Curtin's book about re-establishing a "peoples" bank'. He holds the seat that Curtin once held. But Labor is funded by the same banks and multinationals as the Coalition.

No, the G.S.T. won't go away. It, together with the issue of foreign ownership, will begin to haunt every Federal politician by night and day.

ILLEGAL AIRFLIGHTS: Although there has been a slight increase in funding for coastal surveillance in northern Australia, this only extends as far as the slow, leaky hulks that deposit their human cargo on Ashmore reef and other sparsely inhabited places.

The Australian (10/7/2000) reported:

"Australia's coastal surveillance authority has warned it is unable to combat the problem of illegal flights – potentially carrying drugs and human cargo – because of weaknesses in its radar system.

"And even if these breaches were traced, the ability of Customs, defence or other civil aircraft to give chase is severely impeded by existing regulations....."

"The Australian has also learned that the problem of so-called 'black flights' may be bigger than anticipated, with one operation in the Kimberley region witnessing 'numerous' suspicious flights over a two-week period.

"Norforce, a military surveillance outfit based in indigenous communities across the top of Australia, revealed that on a recent exercise out of Wyndham, six unusual light aircraft were reported to customs crossing the coastline on a single day"

It should be remembered that close to 2% of the Northern Territory is foreign-owned – by an Indonesian family and the Sultan of Brunei. One property includes a major air-strip.

To say that technology capable of speedily identifying both air and sea transport is not available is laughable. Why, then, was it not in place years ago?

SHOOT-FOR-THE-DOLE: According to the acting Minister for Defence Bruce Scott, the Federal Government is "actively considering" allowing work-for-the-dole recipients to fulfill their work obligations in the Army Reserve. While the general idea of work-for-the-dole is totalitarian in nature, this would at least provide recipients to gain trade qualifications, and increase our pitiful defence capacity at the same time. We think the concept worth supporting.

But Mr. Scott said no decision had yet been made (The Australian, 5/7/2000).

BEHIND DAIRY DEREGULATION: The closer one looks at the deregulation fiasco the clearer it becomes that the only beneficiary is one giant multinational, Parmalat of Italy.

While farmers have owned their own co-operative processors in the past, the actual distribution of milk has been taken out of their hands. They are the prisoners of those who distribute milk to the retailers – now almost exclusively the big supermarket chains.

Even in Victoria, the claimed beneficiary of deregulation, dairy farmers, or what will be left of them, will depend on National Foods (the Pura brand) and Ideal (run by Pauls) for distribution to the Victorian consumer. Pauls is owned by Parmalat, which is also in the process of taking over National Foods. Pauls also controls the Brisbane market.

No matter how efficient a dairy farmer may be, he will soon be in a position where he cannot deliver milk to anyone but a Parmalat operative, at the price it determines.

Parmalat, a giant by any standard, owns 60% of the Canadian milk industry, and is set to complete a stranglehold over Australia. Remaining farmers, who have been played one against the other, may finally discover that they are ALL eliminated, and that our milk is delivered from New Zealand, where the dairy industry is pushing for a merger with that of Australia.

Another example of a mafia monopoly destroying a once-viable, family-owned Australian farming sector.

TWO AMAZING WOMEN:

Lady Jane Birdwood – The "Obituaries" columns of London's Daily Telegraph, June 30th, 2000, announced the death of Lady Jane Birdwood, observing that, "THE DOWAGER LADY BIRDWOOD, who has died aged 87, was a prominent proponent of racist ideas."

In October, 1999, the United Kingdom On Target researcher Barry Turner, commemorating the death of Dr. Kitty Little, referred to her friendship (and crusades) with Lady Birdwood: "... in the 1970s Kitty began her crusade, together with her friend The Dowager Lady (Jane) Birdwood and others, to pursue the various connections she had uncovered during her formal professional career, with the activities of powerful political and commercial interests, by no means least those forces that lie behind global strategies for a New World Order.

"In the case of Lady Birdwood, who later became vilified and marginalised as 'neo-Nazi', 'Fascist', 'Extreme-Right', and all the usual quasi-political cachets, for her determined battle for repatriation of those who had immigrated en masse into the United Kingdom... It is conveniently forgotten that, with Kitty's full approval and scientific grasp of the genetics of race, Jane Birdwood worked closely with the likes of Ronald Bell, Q.C., M.P., ... who, along with others, recognised those Zionist, International, Fabian Socialist, Liberal-Libertarian and other influences that were dedicated not to racial harmony, but to the dissolution of national cultures and identities through the use of racial and immigration strategies..."

Dr. Kitty Little, M.A., B.Sc., D.Phil. – Dr. Kitty Little's background is like reading about a female 'James Bond!' (without the 'interludes'). "Kitty Little had already uncovered the East-West collaboration in the fields of medicine, science and technology, was well aware of Soviet biological warfare preparations, as well as the probable use of AIDS for these reasons in Africa." After graduating with distinction in Chemistry and Metallurgy, she went on to gain her Doctorate for her work with the Ministry of Aircraft production.

Between 1949 and 1958 whilst working at the Atomic Energy Research Establishment at Harwell, she struck up a friendship with security officer Wing Commander (retired) Henry Arnold who disclosed how he and another M.I.5. agent, Brian Grimston, had uncovered Victor Rothschild's treachery after he (Rothschild) had arranged for Dr. Klaus Fuchs – convicted spy – to pass atomic secrets to the Soviet Union.

"From 1956 to 1966 Kitty worked for Prof. Joesph Trueta in the Nuffield Department of Orthopaedic Surgery where she had charge of the electron microscope... (In later years) "Combining her legitimate research with investigative work, Kitty discovered ... deliberate cover-up, of connections between Bone Pathology, the Contraceptive Pill (later on to be linked to AIDS), and vested interests in the field of Atomic Energy. Her work on Cancer also revealed how smoking has been used to divert attention from the greater carcinogenic effects of diesel-engine exhaust emissions..." And so the story of this remarkable woman goes on.

Kitty also, "involved herself in the Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy (B.S.E.) crisis, and demonstrated that human Creutzfeldt Jakob Disease (C.J.D.), could not cross the species barrier from infected cattle to humans. At the opening of the B.S.E. Inquiry in 1998, her statement was the only one from an individual, amongst others representative of vested interests."

She "was equally concerned about Organophosphates, the Gulf War Syndrome, and the genocide of the Iraqi people as a result of the campaign waged by the so-called "International Community" in the name of the United Nations. She had no doubt about the devastating effects on the Iraqi population from the deliberate destruction of the infrastructure..."

Two amazing women who have now 'passed the torch' for the younger ones to take up.
