THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK: World Government: "The concept of absolute sovereignty of States will have to make concessions as never before in [the] face of today's emerging environmental crisis. There will have to be a high degree of willing subordination of national sovereignty in favour of the common good of all nations."

– Sir Ninian Stephens, "The Growth of International Environmental Law",
Environmental Planning Law Journal, Vol.9, 1991 at p.185.

THE FRENCH AND DUTCH POLITICAL TSUNAMI! by Michael James:

Michael James is a British freelance journalist and translator, now resident in Germany.

"On May 29, 2005, under a blazing sun, a raggle-taggle army of French patriots, nationalists, libertarians, conservatives, socialists and communists joined together as one in an unprecedented strategic alliance and mounted a stunning, crippling attack on the New World Order in the heart of Europe.

Just three days later, fired by the courage of their French cousins to the south, the Dutch people rallied to the standard and put to flight whatever remained of the European elites' parasitic army of self-absorbed, Lucifer-worshipping propagandists; treading underfoot all 252 pages of 'The Treaty Establishing a Constitution for Europe', a veritable Devil's Charter for the final subjugation and control of an already heavily regulated people.

Within the space of less than a week, the beast-men who arrogantly run the Europe Union out of a sense of natural entitlement and intellectual superiority, licking their chops at the prospect of Europe's first real head of state with potent executive powers and a triumphant expansionary agenda, have fallen from their over-world abode of studied indifference and invulnerability into a pit of unfathomable despair.

In the thirty-three months it took to write and then rewrite the new constitution in a frantic bluster of secret negotiations and self-congratulatory banquets, and at a cost to taxpaying munchkins of untold millions of euros, nothing could have prepared them for this dark hour. For these pampered viceroys of a revived Roman empire who take upon themselves the title of 'Excellency' work to a timetable set by a higher master – a master who jealously stalks the corridors of power, from Whitehall to Washington, Beijing to Moscow, looking to devour those who serve less than flawlessly and without an eye on the clock. It's five minutes to twelve, and the ticking has rudely stopped.

THE 'MASTER' IS FURIOUS: This wasn't meant to happen. The propaganda has always worked in the past. The entire left-right spectrum of the French political and Catholic establishment, backed by a nimble phalanx of pseudo experts and geriatric SWAT teams of white-haired university professors with impressive titles, joined with both 'respectable society' and the drug-addled icons of popular Parisian culture to remind all good citizens through the whoring mainstream media and their legion of multiple-orifice prostitutes that it was their duty to say "Oui". But the sons and daughters of French liberty, seething with an indignant rage shared by millions of Europeans denied the right to vote, confronted the globalist beast and yelled "Non!"

The political tsunami was felt from the west coast of Ireland to the east coast of Greece. "Non! The Earthquake," proclaimed the headline on the front page of La Tribune, while the globalist newspaper Libération attacked the rebellious French, describing the result as representing "a general disaster and an epidemic of populism, which is sweeping everything in its path". The May 30 edition of the Europhile British daily, The Guardian, went further and claimed boldly: "Yesterday was nothing less than the beginning of the second French revolution."

The mainstream German press, constrained as it is by a general prohibition on all talk of alternatives to the European Union, could only speculate on what might have happened had the German people been allowed to vote. "The French voted for us," was a common refrain on the streets of Frankfurt. The German parliament, traditionally fearful of allowing ordinary citizens to vote in referenda, in much the same way it fears any objective discussion about the lies contained within the pages of Germany's official 'history' books, treasonously ratified the treaty with a comfortable majority on Friday, May 27, following a series of quisling pro-EU speeches reminiscent of East Germany's subservience to the Soviet Union.

This audacious betrayal of the German people took place against a backdrop in which the mainstream media made no mention of the planned NATO and US neoconservative takeover of the German armed forces, an agenda concealed in cleverly worded provisions in Articles 1-14 and 1-16 of the treaty. Indeed, mindful of the wrath of the City of London and its insidious international banking operations, already responsible for instigating and financing two world wars to break the spirit of the German people, the federal media shut down all discussion of the constitution's implications for other independent European armies.

The French saved their fellow Europeans: As neatly summarised by journalist and peace campaigner Israel Shamir, the French saved their fellow Europeans from a fate worse than death by killing a document that would forever bind sovereign national armies to NATO, placing them under the control of neo-fascist Washington and its Satanic, Zionist puppet masters in London.

"The proposed constitution was about to subordinate the European Armed Forces to the NATO, meaning to the US command," wrote Israel Shamir in the May 30 edition of TheTruthSeeker.co.uk. "But for [the] wisdom of the French voters, in the next US invasion, Europeans would be forced to serve in the invading force, whether it is Iran or Russia that the Neo-cons will decide to subdue."

Wrong-footed, winded and fumbling, the flabby, grey-faced politicians and lawyers are out in force: explaining, soothing, prevaricating. It's spin time again.

Like a host of Armani-suited Jabba the Hutts, sliming their way from one government-controlled mainstream media outlet to the next, Europe's political degenerates are putting the shine on a humiliating defeat with words carefully chosen lest they unwittingly acknowledge the power that ordinary people still possess.

Britain's best-known murderer, Tony Blair: "Time for reflection". Germany's outgoing Chancellor, Gerhard Schroeder: "Regrettable". France's Traitor-in-Chief himself, Jacques Chirac: "I take note".

The elites are busy scribbling the notes of which Chirac spoke. Legally, the treaty requires ratification in all 25 European Union member states, yet angry Bilderbergers such as Jose Manuel Barroso, the current head of the European Commission, are already hissing that either dissenting nations would be 'invited' to vote again until they get it 'right', or that something may miraculously emerge from the small print previously overlooked, which would allow for a more liberal interpretation of the rules. "We cannot say that the treaty is dead," Barroso warned ominously.

A full-blooded political insurrection cuts across artificial divide: But the Dutch Disagree. As I write, millions of them are kicking the corpse of this odious treaty; and should there be yet one twitch remaining in the body of its articles, the British and the Danes will finish the job.

For American readers unacquainted with life on the European continent, understand that this is nothing less than the start of a full-blooded political insurrection that cuts right across the artificial political divide. While the wheels have come off the European project, leaving the vehicle stuck in a constitutional ditch, opponents of the globalist agenda are now poised for what should be an aggressive and determined attack on the very engine of expansion and integration.

Trauma-based economic terrorism: For both Americans and Europeans, the enemy is the same. It employs trauma-based economic terrorism under the banner of 'free markets' to demolish the nation state and our God-given rights to liberty and self-determination. It works through price-gouging, tax largesse for corporations that destroy free-enterprise, the wholesale destruction of the middle classes by encouraging the export of quality jobs abroad and the import of cheap labour to displace what few options are left. It is dedicated to the creation of artificial conflicts and trivial distractions to keep people divided and drugged, and it maintains the constant drumb-beat of militarism that nuances the dance of death in which the United Nations and the United States are willing partners who fake being out of step.

The world has long since surrendered its hope that fearless Americans will rise up by force of arms and reclaim their birthright, retaking their great country from the freedom and wealth-destroying Zionist cabal in Washington. While their children die for Israel and oil in a war to depopulate a broken Arab nation that did them no harm, most Americans are lost in a bizarre fantasy world of asinine government propaganda, junk entertainment and effeminate shopping malls.

But though, for now, the issue is a diabolical treaty settled without a whiff of gun-smoke at the ballot box, the French have raised the standard of resistance against a wounded but unrepentant New World Order, and the battle lines are drawn.

Europe's parasitic elites in London, Brussels and Strasbourg will neither forgive nor forget; and in the months and years to come, they will not go down without drawing blood. So mark this day and mark it well, for Europe stands before the fire. At long last, the fight-back has begun."

SURE...TORTURE'S OKAY says Academic by James Reed:

The head of the Law School at Deakin University in Victoria, Professor Mirko Bagaric, has written a paper arguing that torture by governments is justified in "extremely limited circumstances" to save thousands of lives. Suspects in such circumstances could, justifiably, be tortured even to the point of death. The proposal has met a storm of controversy. Senator Kerry Nettle, Australian Greens, said that Professor Bagaric should be sacked as a member of the Refugee Review Tribunal. I will review the paper when it is available.

REGION ON A KNIFE EDGE by Betty Luks:

The Wimmera Times' 11/4/05 report of the crises faced by so many of our Australian farmers, due, not only to the prolonged drought conditions, but also to their crippling debts and the cruel interest charges, leaves one with such a sense of despair as well as frustration.

Natural-law seasonal conditions such as drought we can't help them with, but isn't fifty years long enough spent in trying to get their attention and make them realise the corrupt, fraudulent banking system is weighted against them? Will they not accept they have been handed "loaded dice"?

No, Australian farmers as a rule, would rather put their faith in their 'leaders' who have led them down a path that leads to a fathomless pit of despair and ruin.

Question: How many years have they farmed their lands and had fairly good seasons, how many generations have farmed the lands – and yet after all this time, not only are they not secure on their farms, they are battling such crippling debts many of them will never be able to pay off?

We have heard there are foreign banks busily buying up the farms – for a song – from desperate farmers. This is just history repeating itself because the people would not and will not learn the truth.

"War Cycles – Peace Cycles", by Richard Kelly Hopkins, is a good book to help get the real picture of how this parasitic banking system has worked over the centuries, it is available from all League Book Services.

Another thing, hasn't it ever dawned on our farmers and struggling businessmen, how odd it is that John Howard can readily find well over $4 billion dollars (when last noted) for the destructive, murderous war in Iraq, and yet, even though they, the farmers - who feed and clothe him - are approaching him with their begging bowls, he is being very tardy and cautious in his response to them?

These politicians seem to believe there is something 'immoral' in saving our farmers, thus saving and securing a future food supply for the nation – and yet nothing immoral in blasting the hell out of the Iraqi people who have done us no harm.

One would have thought the security of our farmers on their lands and surety of our nation's food supply would have been one of the first priorities of a people's government.

WHERE YOUR MONEY GOES by Benjamin Davis:

Two Jewish academics, Dr. Suzanne Rutland, chair of the University of Sydney's Hebrew, Biblical and Jewish Studies department and University of New South Wales sociologist, emeritus (i.e. "retired") professor Sol Encel have received a three-year $85,000 grant from the Australian Research Council (ARC) for the Study "A Political Sociology of Australian Jewry". The study marks the 60th anniversary of the Executive Council of Australian Jewry (ECAJ).

According to ECAJ deputy president Diane Shteinman, the study will be a historical and sociological examination of "the Jewish community through the prism of ECAJ's six decades and its future goals". (Australian Jewish News 3/12/04).

The project is co-sponsored by the ECAJ, Sydney's Jewish Communal Appeal and World Jewish Congress senior vice-president, Isi Liebler. Liebler now lives in Israel.

The ECAJ had its origins "in 1944 as a unifying federal roof body that worked with Canberra to help with the intake of Holocaust refugees".

So, $85,000 of Australians' hard-earned tax monies can be spent on a study of a lobby group which protected the interests of a powerful ethnic group.

In fairness and equal opportunity, how about $85,000 from the Australian Research Council for a biography of that great League of Rights man, Eric Butler, who devoted this life to the tireless defence of the freedom of all individuals?"

Oh well, don't hold your breath waiting for the ARC to send a cheque. The ARC is a cash cow for an array of politically correct projects in the humanities and social sciences.
