THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK: "The Law is the power behind the throne, for even the King himself owes his authority to it... But into the power which lies behind the Law, because it lies behind the Legislature... that power has fallen into all but desuetude – disuse: the Power of the People to insist their representatives in Parliament should voice their demands."

– "The Law" by Sir Henry Slessor, 1936

CHINA IS NOT A 'FRIEND' by James Reed:

A new book by Ted C. Fishman, entitled China, Inc: How the Rise of the Next Superpower Challenges America and the World, is required reading for anyone concerned about "Australia's Asia destiny" (the book is readily available in most mainstream book stores...ed). Fishman is not anti-China-power but he does raise the question "What would happen when China will be able to manufacture everything – computers, cars, jumbo jets and pharmaceuticals – that the United States and Europe can, at perhaps half the cost!"

Fishman raises the question in his factual book documenting China's emerging industrial might, but he does not confront the grim reality of the de-industrialisation of the once White West.

De-industrialised societies essentially fall apart and the standard of living declines. Industry is needed to maintain a critical intellectual and technological infrastructure and without it nations face deskilling and social decline, perhaps to the point that they are no longer able to defend themselves.

An article in The Australian, 3/8/05, "Japan to Speed Up Missile Defence", mentions in passing that the Japanese government's deployment of a ballistic missile shield is not merely against the "threat" of North Korean attacks, but also "Chinese attacks". The CIA has made it public that the only nation which has nuclear missiles trained on American cities is China.

NOT OUR CHINA PLATE, MATE! by James Reed:

It is difficult to find any mainstream writers, politicians, intellectuals – you name it – prepared to criticize the new economic god, China. Once in a while though a small challenging item does slip through. Front page of The Weekend Australian, 13-14/8/05, had this small headline, "China Arms a Threat to Region: Taiwan". Taiwanese President Chen Shui-bian said that the rapid military build-up of China posed a threat to the security of Australia and other nations in the Asia-Pacific region. He said that China wanted to be No.1 power in the region and already had missiles with a 10,000km range that could hit the US and Australia.

THE PEKING-CANBERRA AXIS –ON TARGET, JANUARY 26th, 1973: Pondering on the fact that Australia has become "the quarry-colony of Asia" and Australians are now on the road to competing more and more as wage-slaves with their counterparts in Asia, they cannot say they weren't warned.

Nearly thirty years ago the following warning was published in this journal.

"Australia and New Zealand are to press for the inclusion of China in an Asian and Pacific mutual assistance organisation. The organisation could be the existing Asian and Pacific Council (ASPAC), but only if Taiwan was replaced by China. The Australian and New Zealand Prime Ministers disclosed this today in a communiqué and Press conference after two days of discussion between Mr. Whitlam and Mr. Kirk.

Australia, NZ and Japan – ASPAC members who have recognised China – are embarrassed by Taiwan's membership in ASPAC." – The Australian, January 23rd.

The hard-nosed men in Peking must be extremely pleased with the manner in which the Whitlam Government is developing a foreign policy which implies that Australia has nothing whatever to fear from Red China... Labor Senator J. Wheeldon has been to North Vietnam at the invitation of the North Vietnam Peace Committee, an organisation sponsored by the Communist Government in Hanoi. The invitation to Senator Wheeldon and his colleagues was extended through the Sydney-based Association for International Co-operation and Disarmament, to "study" the extent of the damage of recent American bombing. There is no suggestion that a study is to be made of the results of Communist terror in South Vietnam...

Southern Africa is one of the Free World's major front lines, which is the reason it is being subject to increasing pressure from the north by terrorist guerrillas backed by Red China. Rhodesia is fighting for survival against the Red Chinese strategy, while Canberra sides with Peking by attempting to apply increasing pressure on Rhodesia. The Association for International Co-operation and Disarmament is permitted to flood Australia with pro-Communist propaganda while the Sydney based Rhodesian Information Centre, representing a country, which is threatening no one, is marked down for destruction by Mr. Whitlam "if he is permitted to get away with it".

Suffering from the same disastrous drought conditions now affecting large areas of Australia, Rhodesia has even been cut off from Australian wheat. A number of the Government's Members, Mr. Kim Beazley, Mr. G. Duthie, Mr. Frank Crean, to name only three, term themselves Christians. We would be interested to learn how they can attempt to justify the Whitlam Government's whitewashing of Peking while at the same time lending support to the mounting international campaign against Rhodesia, the Portuguese Territories and South Africa.

Opening Zambia's Parliament on January 10th, President Kaunda, who provides a base for Communist backed terrorists, said he "warmly welcomed" the policies of the new Australian and New Zealand Governments on Southern Africa.

AND – "BANK CHIEF MAKES SENSE", JULY 16th, 1971: Australia little more than an international quarry:

Mr. B. Callaghan, managing director of the Commonwealth Banking Corporation, warned Australians they ignored changes in neighbouring countries at their own peril, The Australian, 9/7/71. Mr. Callaghan said Australia should avoid becoming little more than an international quarry for more farsighted people. He said Australia had to avoid the "she'll be right mate" state of mind, which could make these foreign quarries a permanent feature. Don't let us sit back complacent in the thought of our growing income from those holes in the ground, and watch the Japanese steel industry increase its output by 12 per cent a year right through the 1970's.

We could not agree more with Mr. Callaghan, and it is good to see him speaking out, as he has on so many occasions on matters of this kind. However, it is equally a pity, that a man of such understanding does not associate the banking policies of the Reserve Bank, along with general financial policies controlled by the Treasury, with the cause of the problem he is concerned about. The insane policy of "capital inflow" at all costs, the growing internal debt structure which robs Australians of investing in their own heritage, and thus providing the financial capital to control and exploit our own resources, in our own best interests, are a direct result of domestic financial policy. Mr. Callaghan is a high officer in that system. It is time he started to look to its defects.

A SAGA OF ECONOMIC TREACHERY: In 1900 over 90 per cent of the US population was self-employed. There was no income tax and no central bank. Government services were paid for by excise taxes. In 1913 the Federal Reserve was created, as was income tax. The national US debt reached 42.9 billion. By 2003 the national debt was $6-8 trillion – a 232,605 per cent increase in the national debt since 1913. The US cost of living has increased by 1547 per cent. Economic terrorism is the most dangerous form of terrorism for it is criminality masking as legality.

PUBLIC-PRIVATE PARTNERSHIPS – from www.womensgroup.org

Public-private partnerships (PPP) are basically the partnering on a business level of government and business. This is a radical shift in the structure of government as it allows businesses to co-manage with them, be it a water facility, electricity, sewers, toll roads and the like.

It's the old-fashioned Fascism all over again: Known in the old World War II days as fascism, this evolving shift in the structure of government was given a lift when the UN Secretary General Kofi Annan went to the World Economic Forum in 1999 and asked corporations to help the UN accomplish its goals of feeding the poor and alleviating poverty in poor countries. This year, the IBLF has come up with a new study showing that CEOs favour public-private partnerships as the way to develop third world countries.

The World Economic Forum also has its share of royalty. Sheiks, kings, princes, dukes and princesses have all graced the podium or workshops, networking and rubbing shoulders with their counterparts on the corporate level.

Bottom line: it is all about money and power – who has it and who is going to get it.

At every turn, it is public-private partnership, selling off government owned resources, or privatizing through partnering with business. President Bush has set up his own initiative, the Millennium Challenge Corporation-MCC, a US government corporation, to administer funds. An informational brochure handed out described it as "an innovative new foreign assistance program designed to eliminate extreme poverty and promote sustainable economic growth."

The purpose is to set up public-private partnerships-PPP.

PPP's are business arrangements for governments to transfer state-owned assets to. Since it is a business arrangement, it is run by the corporate partner.

THE ADVENTURES OF A 'RACIST' PROFESSOR by James Reed:

I have been following with interest the 'debate' about "racist" professor Andrew Fraser of Macquarie University. The Australian, 27/7/05, reports that Professor Fraser said he would be sacked because his views were to be seen to threaten the income the university derived from foreign students: "This is a message to young academics that they are at serious risk if they are not committed to the politically correct orthodoxy... This is the Soviet Union all over again."

The Macquarie University Vice-Chancellor Di Yerbury denied that there was a sack threat, for the university has merely invited him to bring forward his retirement: "It doesn't necessarily mean the sack".

The Australian, 30-31/7/05, reports that Professor Fraser has been suspended. Professor Fraser described Yerbury as an "intellectual coward". Yerbury suspended the professor because of "fears" of disruption of his classes by the usual rent-a-crowd folk. This is merely a smokescreen for Yerbury's political correctness, that involved apologising to the African community.

Students though expressed strong support for Professor Fraser's right to free speech: The Australian, 1/8/05. The National Tertiary Education Union has moved to support his rights. This type of support would never have been available in the 1980s and 1990s.

There is at last a growing awakening of the evils of the religion of political correctness.

DENOUNCING MULTICULTURALISM – AGAIN: No sooner have I finished one article denouncing the racially suicidal policy of multiculturalism, do I find yet another article claiming that multiculturalism is destroying the West. Janet Albrechtsen, a journalist who is both intelligent and from her photograph, 'easy on the eye', was one of the few journalists to consistently criticise multiculturalism before the recent fashion of doing so. Her article "End of an Innocent Age", The Australian, 27/7/05, is essentially an "I told you so" piece which shows that eventually "reality bites".

She makes the point that the sacred cows of the 1960s "cultural revolution" are dying or dead. She concludes: "Who knows which of the '60s sacred cows will be next?" I have said the same myself in these pages a number of times.

The poison and damage of this dangerous era which legitimised communistic thought though, still remains.

MORE ON THE "JOYS" OF MULTICULTURALISM: Justice Minister Chris Ellison has said that the practice of teenagers being flown to Lebanon by their families and forced into marriages was "tantamount to sexual trafficking" and would be punished by new laws which punished sexual trafficking with 25 years in prison. Teenage girls as young as 14 were involved. But it was not just the Arab-Australian community which was involved but also the African-Australian community, if not involved in the 'export trade', at least had a problem with "early marriage".

The article quotes NSW Community Relations Commission Chair Stepan Kerkyasharian as saying that forced marriages were against the spirit of multiculturalism. How can that be?

Such forced marriages are arrangements in the Arab and African world that have been conducted for all of recorded history – before even than the emergence of the West.

If anything is a part of multiculturalism (that all cultural traditions are equally valid), it is forced marriages.

Multicultural policy has never openly embraced its implicit cultural relativism as an official policy. It has always been a front for the doctrine of multiracialism which aims for the dilution of the Northern European gene pool.
