THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK: "The Church speaks out for liberty and authority at the same time... She does not demand the sacrifice of either, but tries to conciliate and to bring them in harmonious accord with each other, by basing herself on the principle... of the suppletive function of the State, a fundamental principle of social philosophy, unshaken and unchangeable. This means that in the first place, the greatest liberty possible – legitimate liberty, of course – must be left to private enterprises, individual or associated, and that State intervention must be resorted to only when such enterprises prove themselves unable to attain their particular ends become detrimental to the general interests of all, or when the direct promotion of the common welfare is concerned..."

To the individual, first of all, must be left the greatest liberty and initiative possible. Then in order to make up for his incapacities, appeal must be made in the first place to the family group, then to a group of greater dimension, professional or others, for everything that is beyond the power of domestic society; and finally, the State will be called upon to undertake the tasks which these larger organisations themselves are unable to accomplish, especially those directly concerning the common welfare..."

If it (Social Credit) vigorously reacts against the individualistic capitalism of the trust magnates of money and credit, it most strongly accentuates the social character of economic life and, particularly, of the monetary system, we see in that nothing properly socialistic... We may be magnificently social without being socialistic. Such is the case for the Crediters."

– George-Henri Levesque, O.P., in "Social Credit and Catholicism", 1936

IDON'T TRUST YOU EITHER, KIM by James Reed: They never rest and never stop. Like killer robots in trashy Hollywood movies, they just keep on coming. Kim Beazley has thrown his weight, and a considerable weight at that, behind the idea of a directly elected president as the head of the Australian republic. A cross-party republican group prepares to launch a campaign in November for an "Australian head of state". The same old lies and propaganda will no doubt be rolled out again; after a suitable dusting down from the 1999 referendum defeat.

Liberal Senator Mitch Fifield, Labor's Nicole Roxon and Democrat's Natasha Stott Despoja will head the team. Recall that emperor-in-waiting Peter Costello is a republican.

Now apart from all the weighty Constitutional and legal arguments that far more legally learned people than me have given – such as the magnificent audio tapes that the League has of *Dr. David Mitchell – there is one argument which I have found always works against the "swinging voter". Do you trust the people who are pushing the republican cause? What do you think their agenda is? And will you be happy when you are given the list of who they will let you vote for as the first Australian president – Gough ("god") Whitlam, Bob ("silver budgee") Hawke and Paul ("foul mouthed") Keating? The republican push is about letting these types of people rewrite the Constitution. I say "no" – their kind is doing enough harm now.

One of the republicans' dirty strategies has been to attempt to discredit Prince Charles, to portray him as a "tree hugger" and talker to plants on the one hand and a womaniser on the other. Anyone who knows anything about the sexual goings-on in the major political parties – the exploits of numerous past Australian prime ministers that the media will never document but which circulate by word of mouth – will immediately see this personal attack on Prince Charles for what it is. It is a sad fact of life today that marriages – the majority of them – break up with the demands and pressures of modern emasculated living. Royalty is not immuned from this disease.

As for the "tree hugging" claim, readers need to purchase from the League a tremendous book by David Lorimer, Radical Prince: The Practical Vision of the Prince of Wales. I read this magnificent book one rainy Saturday afternoon and went from being a moderate supporter of Prince Charles to a strong supporter and believer that the man would be a great king. I would have called the book The Philosopher Prince.

Prince Charles is seen for having profound insights, mixing traditional conservative thought and the best of progressive thought. He has defended the principles of sacred art and architecture and attacked modernism in architecture. On the other hand, Prince Charles has embraced the best of ecology and supported organic foods and thriving rural communities. The "tree hugger" and "plant talker" labels are slurs to discredit him and have no link to reality.

A very concise quote occurs in this book which sums up Prince Charles' philosophy of life.

He says: "As I have grown older I have gradually come to realise that my entire life so far has been motivated by a desire to heal – to heal the dismembered landscape and the poisoned soil; the cruelly shattered townscape, where harmony has been replaced by cacophony; to heal the divisions between intuition and rational thought, between mind, body and soul, so that the temple of our humanity can once again be lit by a scared flame; to level the monstrous artificial barrier erected between Tradition and Modernity and above all, to heal the mortally wounded soul that, alone, can give us warning of the folly of playing God and of believing that knowledge on its own is a substitute for wisdom".

Such a level of thought belongs to the likes of Socrates, to philosophies such as Plato and Kant. Could you see Gough Whitlam, Hawke or Keating – our likely presidents – thinking in such terms? Indeed Hawke wants Australia to become the nuclear waste dump of the world. That is a precise metaphor for what the republicans want for Australia.

DUMBED DOWN OR WHAT? by James Reed: The NSW Higher School Certificate exam in "Advanced" English, held on Thursday, October 20th, 2005, dealt with Shakespeare's King Lear and the poetry of W.B. Yeats. Yet sitting alongside the classics was another "text" for children to analyse: the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Commission's (ATSIC) website. ATSIC was abolished by the Commonwealth government in March this year but the NSW Board of Studies ensured that the site remained up for this year's exam – after all, good brain-rotting propaganda takes time to prepare and our youth must never be given a second to recover from White Guilt chronic fatigue.

The Australian, October 21st, 2005, quotes Dr. Spurr, a senior lecturer in English at the University of Sydney who said that ATSIC would be as surprised as the rest of us as "Their purpose presumably was to promote the indigenous cause, not produce literature".

But that is actually the purpose of much of the "Arts" today – not to preserve Western civilization, but to bury it.

While I detest The Australian newspaper, it is good to see that even they have taken a stand against "postmodernism" (= anti-West) philosophies in education. But they want to resist this dumbing down to maintain Australia's role in the Asia Pacific economy, for today even slaves must be educated.

Nevertheless The Australian's crusade against postmodernism has a spin-off benefit for us, the lovers of our race and defenders of freedom.

APPEAL TO THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF: The following e-mail has been widely circulated. Tony Pitt of Queensland has sent a copy to the Governor-General asking him to act on the – if true – alarming matter.

"As Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces it is your duty to ensure that this matter is fully investigated. Please take the appropriate action.

A.R. (Tony) Pitt, 79 Ferry Street, Maryborough, Qld., 4650.

The original message came from a Grace Bible Church pastor in Thailand: "The Indonesian-Australian relationship", Thursday, October 13th, 2005.

"Former Indonesian President Abdurrahman Wahid has claimed in an interview with SBS that it was the Indonesian Armed Forces that ordered the 2002 Bali Bombing.

As I sit back now waiting for all the denials to follow, I can only continue to reiterate what I have been saying for years. Australia gave Singapore free access to Top Secret documents regarding the structure of the Indonesian Armed Forces. They were "sprung" by Australian Army Intelligence officers in 1981 and needed an immediate decoy. That person was me.

They continued to pretend, up to the early 90's that they had caught their man, whilst behind the scenes the real culprit continued to operate with impunity. As recently as 1999, when I protested my innocence to Major Brady, the Unit Security Officer of 7th Signals Regiment, I further protested that unless this matter was investigated, it would create unpleasant consequences for Australia's relationship with Indonesia.

Colonel Russell Smith, the Director of Australian Army Security, told me, through Major Brady, that if I had a complaint, I should take it to Singaporean Intelligence. Blatant cover up where a man should ask the perpetrator of a crime to investigate himself because the victim is not interested.

About 4 years ago, Australian Intelligence worked a deal with the Singaporean Government, who authorised us to establish a spy station at Kranji, Singapore, whose sole purpose is to spy on the Indonesians and Malaysians and to share this information with the Singaporeans.

In the eyes of the Indonesians, Australia betrayed their trust during the invasion of Timor, and we are continuing to do so. The Indonesian armed forces continue to run the show in Indonesia with a democratic elected President serving as their dissemblance.

In 2002, one Teungku Hasbi was ordered by Indonesian Intelligence to arrange the slaughter of innocents. Over 80 Australians were murdered along with 120 others. Mr Hasbi is a Jemaah Islamiah terrorist. He has links here in Thailand and is involved in the unrest in the south of Thailand that has cost the lives of over 1,000 people since early last year.

Mr. Hasbi's colleague in Thailand, Mr. Hambali, was the mastermind behind the first Bali bombing. He was arrested just north of me right here in Thailand. Mr. Hambali appears to have disappeared into thin air since his arrest and I can only consider that he is in American custody.

Does it not appear strange that all these Australian drug mules are suddenly being arrested in large numbers, not only on Indonesian soil, but with the collaboration of the Australian Federal Police? These young men and women are facing a firing squad. They will be sacrificed in order for Australia to create an impression that they are co-operating with the Indonesian authorities. The Indonesians are smiling to our face and murdering our children in Bali.

The recent attack by the Indonesian people on Kerbokon prison in an attempt to murder those arrested for the Bali bombing is little more than rent a crowd. It was common knowledge that the Indonesians had transferred those convicted to another prison well before the anniversary of the 2002 Bali bombing.

Mervyn Jenkins died, because he told the Americans the truth about what was happening in Timor. The Australians had lied in order to appease the Indonesian armed forces.

Andrew Plunkett protested the Australian appeasement of the Indonesian armed forces in Timor which resulted in the death of countless innocent civilians. He was discharged.

Lance Collins was railroaded, because he tried to warn Australia. Unfortunately Lance Collins did not know that the Australians already knew what he was trying to warn them about and did not want it made public.

I am just one of several former Australian soldiers who feels it is essential that Australia totally overhaul its Intelligence resources immediately. We need to review our relationship with our neighbours in South East Asia as a matter of urgency.

The Malaysians consider the United States to be terrorists, and the Australian alliance in Iraq is an affront to the Islamic people of that country. The close relationship that Australia has with Singapore has poisoned the water and they see Singapore as Australia's lackey allowing us to use their territory to spy on both the Indonesians and Malaysians. Paul Keating's comment that the Malaysians are recalcitrant still rings in the ears of many Malay people. Many consider us the white trash of South East Asia.

Malaysia calls for peace, but how can they enjoy this peace with an Islamic uprising on their northern border, Malays being murdered and Thai-Malay refugees now crossing the border into Malaysia.

South East Asia is a powder keg and about to explode! Australian Intelligence resources are well understaffed and lacking in persons with the appropriate expertise to cope with the forthcoming emergency. If only they would listen instead of continuing to shoot the messenger.

In a short time, the Indonesian economy will again collapse, and the Thai economy will not be far behind. There will be huge unemployment and social turmoil.

Share my views with whomever you will. This last bombing in Bali was the last straw for me. I saw a photo of the body of that little kid from Perth, my home town. I wept. This insanity must be stopped!

Australians must be awoken from their slumber and force changes that protect our interests in South East Asia whilst respecting the interests of our neighbours.

I beg for a little patience with the supply of documents. I am not surprised to learn that the Ombudsman will not assist RG. I have all the documentation required, but if I release it too soon, or to the wrong person, I can undo much good investigative work that I have initiated behind the scenes over the past two years. I beg for patience, but not for long.

My patience has brought me this far, just a little more, and I will be able to bring this matter home. Graham Shaw, Thailand.
