THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK: "The key to the Kingdom is Faith, and the essence of Social Credit is Faith. It is the policy which will bring the apparent Reality of the 'here and now' in the physical world – the apparent Reality as understood through the senses – into harmony with the absolute Reality of the limitless and eternal domain of ...the Kingdom of Heaven.

Faith is (the) policy which naturally stems from the spiritual, Faith-inspired, God-centred and Christian concept of Life.

The resulting conflict in the sphere of human affairs is fundamentally a conflict between the spiritual concept of Life and the 'materialistic' concept of Life – between the power of Faith and the forces generated by fear – between the power of God and the forces of Mammon – between Christ and the Anti-Christ."

– "Faith, Power and Action" by L.D. Byrne, 1946

OH, HOW BASE IT IS! by Nigel Jackson: There is an ancient tradition that one should allow one's enemies access to the battle field to bury their dead. It is a matter of magnanimity and piety.

It is a pity that the editors of The Australian did not remember this custom when deciding to publish Philip Jones' malicious opinion article on Eric Butler as an obituary ('Anti-Semitic zealot held surprising political sway', 13/6).

There is, of course, no way of checking the authenticity of Jones' gratuitous personal opening with its barrage of petty insults. Judging by the rest of the article, I expect it is fiction.

To take a simple example, it is completely false to claim that Butler believed 'the existence of German concentration camps was a myth'.

Readers may well ponder why a powerful national newspaper has stooped to such scurrilous defamation of a dead man who is not here to reply, but who, to the best of his ability and in accord with his deeply researched and considered worldview, worked arduously for sixty years to preserve political freedom in Australia.

DESCENT INTO HELL : REPLY TO BRIAN SIMPSON by James Reed: I agree with Brian Simpson (O.T. 16/6/06) that there are many aspects of the Aboriginal violence issue that I did not discuss, such as homosexual rape. That does not alter the basic point that violence against women in such Aboriginal communities is at even greater levels. Worse, there is a strange traditional aspect - no doubt twisted and perverted by alcohol - to some of the violence. Journalist Paul Toohey in The Weekend Australian (14/4/06 reprinted 19/5/06 p.15) cites Kevin Lee, a former Northern Territory forensic pathologist, who observed from examining the bodies of Aboriginal women that it is "surprisingly frequent to find that [a firestick has] been part of an assault. It's not sexual assault in the way people think of it; it's an assault directed at the sexual organs". Toohey goes on to say: "Aboriginal men traditionally have had disciplinary rights over women, but whether a firestick and promising children to drunks are part of customary law seems doubtful." I agree.

Ideas, such as "sending in the army", as made by Kimberley Land Council director Peter Yu, for a military reconstruction effort (The Australian, 17/5/06, p.6) are well meaning suggestions, but doomed to failure unless the problems of alcohol and pornography are dealt with. The firestick idea - a horrible assault on womanhood - is really a twisted, alcohol-based version of White-fella's porno magazines. I spare the reader the gruesome details - there is enough misery in this debate. The "descent into hell" (Wesley Aird, The Australian 18/5/06, p.12) that Aborigines face is a by-product of tolerated racially suicidal evils that are eating away, somewhat slower, and at lower abuse rates at White Australians as well.

A debate in the coalition party room on 23/5/06 heard that American hip-hop video clips with Black gangster rappers singing misogynist lyrics along with hard core pornography was the fuel of violence in indigenous communities (source: "Hip-Hop Blamed for Violence", The Australian, 24/5/06, p.6). Rap music celebrates violence and the degradation of women - especially White women. Songs by Black rappers freely advocate shooting White police officers and raping White women. Black women are treated as sex objects. This music would clearly be contrary to the race-hate clauses of the Racial Discrimination Act but it is sold freely in big music shops because it is pushed by the music industry. If a White said even one hundredth of what these groups said, he would be gaoled. This music of hate is even more socially destructive than pornography.

EYE ON CHINA by James Reed: Chinese President Hu Jintao in his recent visit to the US has allegedly moved to ease trade tensions with the U.S. by cutting its trade surplus. What would he do about China's disregard of intellectual property rights and piracy as well as giving access to China's markets? Steps will be taken to resolve this he said. Sure, when hell freezes over: China promised to deliver a flexible exchange rate but still keeps a tight grip on the rate.

The visit was "lightened" by a "security breach" when a New York doctor Wenyi Wang who was given accreditation as a reporter was able to scream at Hu to stop killing the Falun Gong. Chinese TV immediately dropped the coverage at that point and reconnected after the incident. Many of the prisoners of the spiritual movement faun Gong are beaten unconscious to save on anaesthetic and then harvested for their organs. (source: The Advertiser, 21/4/06, p.34) This is one of China's big businesses: supplying organs to wealthy foreigners and local Chinese.

The New York Times reports that the main concern between China and the U.S. was oil. The White house said: "China is acting just like everyone else: subjugating its foreign policy to its energy concerns. That leaves the world with two options. The first is to manage energy resources better. The other is to look for another planet."

In fact the third unstated option is war. The Pentagon has said that the U.S. is shifting its military power to the Asia-Pacific and equipping for high tech warfare against China. At the same time global financiers have worked to build up China so that this apocalyptic encounter may occur. After obtaining ultimate money and power there can only be one final 'kick' - that of global death and destruction. It is a situation which only makes sense in Biblical terms.

THE SANDS OF TIME by James Reed: As Western economists salivate about China's miracle economic growth, ecological destruction in China continues at an alarming rate. The sands of the Gobi Desert now blow into Beijing on a regular basis. Over-farming and the destruction of forests in China's manic drive for development has led to China now having 2.5 times as much desert as farmland (The Australian, 18/4/06, p.8). In the great storm of history all great powers are ultimately blown away by the sands of time.

MASS IMMIGRATION 'AKIN TO BARBARIAN INVASIONS' – REAR ADMIRAL: One of Britain's most senior military strategists has warned that western civilisation faces a threat on a par with the barbarian invasions that destroyed the Roman empire.

In an apocalyptic vision of security dangers, Rear Admiral Chris Parry said future migrations would be comparable to the Goths and Vandals while north African "barbary" pirates could be attacking yachts and beaches in the Mediterranean within 10 years.

Europe, including Britain, could be undermined by large immigrant groups with little allegiance to their host countries – a "reverse colonisation" as Parry described it. These groups would stay connected to their homelands by the internet and cheap flights. The idea of assimilation was becoming redundant, he said.

The warnings by Parry of what could threaten Britain over the next 30 years were delivered to senior officers and industry experts at a conference last week. Parry, head of the development, concepts and doctrine centre at the Ministry of Defence, is charged with identifying the greatest challenges that will frame national security policy in the future.

If a security breakdown occurred, he said, it was likely to be brought on by environmental destruction and a population boom, coupled with technology and radical Islam. The result for Britain and Europe, Parry warned, could be "like the 5th century Roman empire facing the Goths and the Vandals".

Parry pointed to the mass migration which disaster in the Third World could unleash. "The diaspora issue is one of my biggest current concerns," he said. "Globalisation makes assimilation seem redundant and old-fashioned...[the process] acts as a sort of reverse colonisation, where groups of people are self-contained, going back and forth between their countries, exploiting sophisticated networks and using instant communication on phones and the internet."

Third World instability would lick at the edges of the West as pirates attacked holidaymakers from fast boats. "At some time in the next 10 years it may not be safe to sail a yacht between Gibraltar and Malta," said the admiral.

Parry, 52, an Oxford graduate who was mentioned in dispatches in the Falklands war, is not claiming all the threats will come to fruition. He is warning, however, of what is likely to happen if dangers are not addressed by politicians.

Parry – who used the slogan "old dog, new tricks" when he commanded the assault ship HMS Fearless – foresees wholesale moves by the armed forces to robots, drones, nanotechnology, lasers, microwave weapons, space-based systems and even "customised" nuclear and neutron bombs.

Lord Boyce, the former chief of the defence staff, welcomed Parry's analysis. "Bringing it together in this way shows we have some very serious challenges ahead," he said. "The real problem is getting them taken seriously at the top of the government."

Ancient Rome has been a subject of serious public discussion this year. Boris Johnson, the Conservative MP and journalist, produced a book and television series drawing parallels between the European Union and the Roman empire.

Parry, based in Shrivenham, Wiltshire, presented his vision at the Royal United Services Institute in central London. He identified the most dangerous flashpoints by overlaying maps showing the regions most threatened by factors such as agricultural decline, booming youth populations, water shortages, rising sea levels and radical Islam.

Parry predicts that as flood or starvation strikes, the most dangerous zones will be Africa, particularly the northern half; most of the Middle East and central Asia as far as northern China; a strip from Nepal to Indonesia; and perhaps eastern China.

He pinpoints 2012 to 2018 as the time when the current global power structure is likely to crumble. Rising nations such as China, India, Brazil and Iran will challenge America's sole superpower status. This will come as "irregular activity" such as terrorism, organized crime and "white companies" of mercenaries burgeon in lawless areas. The effects will be magnified as borders become more porous and some areas sink beyond effective government control.

Parry expects the world population to grow to about 8.4 billion in 2035, compared with 6.4 billion today. By then some 68% of the population will be urban, with some giant metropolises becoming ungovernable. He warns that Mexico City could be an example.

In an effort to control population growth, some countries may be tempted to copy China's "one child" policy. This, with the widespread preference for male children, could lead to a ratio of boys to girls of as much as 150 to 100 in some countries. This will produce dangerous surpluses of young men with few economic prospects and no female company.

"When you combine the lower prospects for communal life with macho youth and economic deprivation you tend to get trouble, typified by gangs and organised criminal activity," said Parry. "When one thinks of 20,000 so-called jihadists currently fly-papered in Iraq, one shudders to think where they might go next."

The competition for resources, Parry argues, may lead to a return to "industrial warfare" as countries with large and growing male populations mobilise armies, even including cavalry, while acquiring high-technology weaponry from the West.

The subsequent mass population movements, Parry argues, could lead to the "Rome scenario". The western Roman empire collapsed in the 4th and 5th centuries as groups such as Ostrogoths, Visigoths, Suevi, Huns and Vandals surged over its borders. The process culminated in the sack of Rome in 455 by Geiseric the Lame, king of the Alans and Vandals, in an invasion from north Africa.

Parry estimated there were already more than 70 diasporas in Britain: In the future, he believes, large groups that become established in Britain and Europe after mass migration may develop "communities of interest" with unstable or anti-western regions. Any technological advantage developed to deal with the threats was unlikely to last. "I don't think we can win in cyberspace – it's like the weather – but we need to have a raincoat and an umbrella to deal with the effects," said Parry.

Top strategist: Parry, one of Britain's leading specialists on amphibious warfare, once commanded the assault ship HMS Fearless and was in charge of amphibious warfare training at Portsmouth naval base and headed a joint British-Dutch taskforce before moving to his post at the Ministry of Defence. <http://www.timesonline.co.uk/article/0,,2087-2220267,00.html>
