The price of Freedom is eternal vigilance –

THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK: "With freedom goes responsibility. A free man is answerable for his own acts and omissions. At Common Law Everyman is answerable for his own acts. No man is answerable for the act of another unless he has commanded or consented to it.... The Common Law conception of the legal responsibility of Everyman for his own acts springs from the conviction of the moral; and intellectual autonomy of Everyman. By virtue of this autonomy each man is an original source of spontaneous and rational action."

– Richard O'Sullivan K.C. in "The Christian Philosophy in the Common Law", 1947

GLOBAL WARMING FANTASIES by James Reed: The next federal election, we have been told, will be fought on the issue of climate change. It is a pity that scientists who disagree with the so-called "consensus" view of climate change seldom get a fair hearing. For example, Professor Zbigniew Jaworowski, chair of the Scientific Committee of the Central Laboratory for Radiological Protection in Warsaw disagrees with the ruling orthodoxy and believes that, from his studies on glaciers that the climate may get cooler.

He is a critic of the main physical evidence advanced to support global warming based on ice cores. He has shown that air trapped in ice is not a closed system, and over time high levels of carbon dioxide get squeezed out of ancient air. In any case, Professor Jaworowski has found almost no change in the level of atmospheric carbon dioxide over the last 8,000 years.

What lies behind the global warming scam? I conjecture that it is yet another attempt by those wanting a one world government, to put their evil scheme into operation by scaring us to abandon our freedoms. Environmentalism in this sense becomes a threat to our freedom, when it should be a mechanism for preserving life on earth. Such is the perversion of rationality that we live under. If you are of a scientific frame of mind, for references on Professor Jaworowski consult online: www.wikipedia.org/wiki/zbigniew_jaworowski

CHINA AND CARBON EMISSION CUT-BACKS by James Reed: British oil giant BP has found that price-induced cuts in energy demands in the developed world have been offset by China's enormous appetite for coal. Global consumption of coal – a carbon-rich fuel – was up 4.5 per cent in 2006, largely due to China. Here is a problem for the world: the dragon has awoken and is breathing smoke and fire. If the global warming scare is true – which I doubt – then China alone will bring down the tent of civilisation with its emissions.

But greenies who are red inside and haters of White civilisation, cannot bring themselves to criticise China. White is bad; Yellow is good is their racist logic. So my little green friends, on your own politically correct premises - kiss your planet goodbye!

It has been said that the U.S. Department of Defense once had an individual present a concept paper where it was proposed that a hormone weapon be created to turn enemy soldiers into homosexuals. (The Australian, 16-17/7/07, p.16) Regardless of the merit, or truth, of this proposal, it seems that something is at work in the modern age, dissolving the brain-power of a generation. Is it in the water supply or the air that is breathed? The great drug that has dumbed down our people. Where has the capacity to think clearly and deeply about a topic gone?

DON'T SAY YOU WEREN'T WARNED – TWO AUSTRALIAS: The following is from reporter Bryan Seymour of Channel 7 TV: 18 July, 2007:

"It's official. New immigration figures from the Bureau of Statistics show Australia is being split in two. Migrants from Asia now outnumber those from Europe and New Zealand, while multicultural Australia is now divided by race.

Dr. Robert Birrell runs the Centre for Population and Urban Research at Monash University. He's an authority on the subject and he's worried. "Sydney and Melbourne are diverging from the rest of Australia," said Dr. Robert Birrell. Immigration figures from the Australian Bureau of Statistics show Asia has now overtaken Europe and New Zealand combined. Almost all new Asian migrants are heading to either Sydney or Melbourne.

"(We now live in) two Australias, because Melbourne and Sydney can be regarded as one Australia where you've got very high proportions of persons born overseas," Dr. Birrell said.

"In Sydney, about 40 per cent of all adults are born overseas, in Melbourne it's about just over 30 per cent."

"I don't think facts lie. Australia's population is changing. "Sydney and Melbourne are diverging from the rest of Australia. In the case of Sydney, by far the biggest single source of migrants in recent years is China and in the case of Melbourne it's now India," Dr. Birrell added. "We're a nation that's now split."

Between July and December last year 27,623 people arrived here from Asia, while 27,325 arrived from Europe and Oceania, which includes the United Kingdom and New Zealand, where traditionally most new Australians came from. And here's where they're going: 10,624 Asian settlers chose Sydney, while 9,035 chose Melbourne.

Chinese Malaysians Daniel Chong and his wife Josephine came here with baby boy Timothy last year. "Well, most of the friends we made here are Asians, Chinese," Daniel said. "At first, when we come here, our English is not very well, so we tend to join the group of people who talks our own language."

Howard doubled annual intake – and it's rising: President of the Australian Chinese Community Association in N.S.W., Lucilla Leung, said new migrants liked Australia's egalitarian roots. "It is such an open society," she said.

"Everybody is Mr. and Mrs. average. I think that attracts a lot of people from old culture."

Ms. Leung said most Asian migrants were not trying to become 'traditional true blue' Aussies.

Asked whether such migrants had a "strong policy of assimilation", she said it was more about integration. "I don't think so," Ms. Leung said. "We have a strong policy of integration."

This grouping together means that in some parts of Sydney and Melbourne, 65 per cent of the adult population is overseas-born.

Under the Howard Government, immigration has doubled to 165,000 per year and rising.

"I don't see diversity in population as a threat in any way to Australia, rather than an opportunity," Voula Messimerri, from the Federation of Ethnic Communities Council of Australia, said.

"Australia is a country of migrants. We accept it and we become, in turn, proud Australians."

Ms. Messimerri said migrants, especially those with skills, can only make Australia better and more prosperous.

"Increasingly, we're seeing Perth and Western Australia, because of the mining boom, becoming another satellite for economic prosperity, so I'm not really sure what Mr. Birrell is talking about," said Ms. Messimerri. WE ARE!

THE EROSION OF AMERICAN FREEDOMS by Brian Simpson: Here in Australia we have already lost these freedoms, but now, under the Democrats, Americans are getting their serve. This will be a taste of what life will be like under President Hillary Clinton-Obama in the new party of colour, ringing in the world of non-White America.

H.R. 1592, the "Local Law Enforcement Hate Crimes Protection Act" and the "Employment Nondiscrimination Discrimination Act" (ENDA) aim to make "hate crimes" a federal offence and to add "sexual orientation" and "gender identity" as protected classes under the U.S. criminal code.

Such hate crimes are crimes motivated by "actual or perceived race, colour, religion, national origin, gender sexual orientation, gender identity, or disability of any person". The idea is to add an aggregated offence to any offence against homosexuals, transvestites, transsexuals and the like. The proposal is endorsed by the majority of Democrats, even though it clearly violates the 1st Amendment of free speech and the 14th Amendment (religious expression). As U.S. lawyer and nationalist Edgar Steele has said: "When thoughts are outlawed, only outlaws will have thoughts."

ZIMBABWEAN AND AFRICAN MELTDOWN by Peter West: Why so much concern from writers in this periodical about multiculturalism-style issues? Why not full-power monetary reform and economic issues? Well, it is of course true that monetary reform is a key to our long-term survival, but in the short-term, survival is the key. If there is a 'conspiracy' or even open war against White survival, then unless this issue is understood and addressed, then all our 'social credit' building efforts may only be for the benefit of those who inherit our world once the dust settles, perhaps the Chinese or fundamentalist Islam. I don't think this is what men such as Major Douglas had in mind.

The media devoted a reasonable amount of space to Zimbabwe's President Robert Mugabe as he set out to secure his political power until he is 89. This involved 'stacking' the central committee, which makes presidential nominations, as well as arresting, beating and torturing opposition activists. And—bingo—Mugabe was re-endorsed as presidential candidate for the 2008 one person/democracy 'election'. 'Bob the Mug' even denounced his vice president Joyce Mujuru, also known during the "liberation war" by her non-de guerre as "Spill Blood". "Spill Blood" complained about Mugabe's "paranoid delusions" which puts the matter mildly. The country is already living with daily economic chaos, with little food and fuel available. Sanctions and international condemnation of Mugabe came, not from the allowing of Blacks to kill the White farmers but solely from the crackdown on political opponents. It seems anti-White racism is to be internationally accepted.

'Bob the Mug' has told the West "to go hang" and no doubt he could show us how. Meanwhile the leaders of the Southern African Development Community, leaders of 14 Southern African countries expressed its "solidarity with the Government and the people of Zimbabwe" ("African Leaders Want Mugabe Sanctions Lifted", The Weekend Australian, 31/3/07, p.13). They wanted sanctions imposed by the West lifted, they did not explain how one could have solidarity with Mugabe, and also those he tortured: talk about 'two bob each way'! But of course, their solidarity is with Mugabe and not with the mythical 'people'.

Many of these countries also have appalling human rights records, and now, following the racial principle (oppose Whites, support Blacks) they are endorsing a dictator to continue to torture and kill, mostly Black folk, but some Whites too. As Janet Albrechtsen, one of the few Australian journalists to take Mugabe to task, has said "This leadership... seems to have inspired a unique African racism, blacks, killing blacks... ethnic cleansing was part of Mugabe's political repertoire."

Another journalist, U.K. "gay activist" Peter Tatchell (cited to give an illustration on the extent of the problem), wrote in The Independent (cited The Australian, 27/3/07, p.15): "Large sections of the liberal left opinion have gone soft on their commitment to universal human rights. They rightly condemn the excesses of British and US government policy but rarely speak out against oppressors who are non-whites and adherents of minority faiths. There are no mass protests against female genital mutilation, forced marriages, the stoning of women and gender apartheid in the Middle East."

A good question from a "gay activist" apart from accepting the liberal-left nonsense that Botha "murdered" blacks. Consider South Africa today under Black rule. The Australian Beacon (Issue 20, 2007, p.5) reports on "Operation White Clean-Up," which is a plan by the police and army to eliminate all White people on the death of Nelson Mandela. The ANC slogan coined by ANC Peter Mokoba, "Kill the Boer, kill the farmer" was found by the South African Human Rights Commission not to be hate speech, but an expression of the constitutional right to free speech." (p.12) But, imagine the different response if Afrikaners starting chanting "Kill the Xhosas, kill the blacks" at the next funeral of a white farmer and his family, murdered by blacks.

In South Africa, attacks on white farmers continue unabated. Since 1994, the year the ANC took power, white farm workers and their families have been murdered. According to President Thabo Mbeki of South Africa, these farm murders are "the final stage of the revolution". (Cited Australian Beacon, p.12)

CONRAD BLACK CONVICTED OF FRAUD AND OBSTRUCTING JUSTICE: The Canadian-born peer was accused of stealing millions from Hollinger International where he was chief executive until November 2003. Convicted on three counts of fraud, Lord Black could face 35 years in jail when sentenced in November.

He first entered the business in 1969 by buying a local paper, the Sherbrooke Record, with his friend David Radler. Within a decade, the pair had a successful chain of papers and hit the big-time in 1985 by buying the Telegraph titles in Britain. His rise put him in the big league with Robert Maxwell and Rupert Murdoch. Robert Maxwell also fell foul of the law, and committed suicide rather than face the consequences of his criminal actions.

The jury was given details of Black's lavish lifestyle, which the Chicago court heard was partly funded through fraud. Black's co-defendants and former Hollinger International executives Jack Boulton, Peter Atkinson and Mark Kipnis have also been found guilty of fraud.

The once-powerful chief executive was cleared of charges of racketeering and tax evasion, but could face a maximum sentence of five years for each fraud count and 20 years for obstruction of justice, as well as a huge fine.
