THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK: "No one has ever seen Society, or heard it, or felt it. Each of us apprehends it only in fragments, and then what we are actually able to give our attention to is a separate instance of association and its result. For example, nobody has ever seen Society do any of the things which Society is commonly said to do. When anyone has been said to be a witness of the vengeance of Society, inflicted upon one or more of its members, what was actually seen was a hangman, a rope, a support for the rope, a moveable platform, a superintending officer, a stopwatch and a victim. Inquiring into the antecedents of these things one sees books, schools, churches, fields in which hemp is growing, factories, the instruments of carpentry and joinery, wig-makers, watchmakers, and homes and so on..."

– Taken from "The Elements of Social Credit : Course of Lectures", 1946.

THE ECHO OF SHOTS FIRED by Brian Simpson: "In the New World Order, there will be neither national sovereignty nor national identity, and just as the population of the nation is to be replaced by Third World immigrants, so the culture of the nation is to be replaced by one suitable only for rootless and deracinated people – a people that can be deluded that what it is told to think and believe is really "universal" and "culture-neutral" because it has long ceased to have any real culture of its own." – Samuel Francis, 1947-2005.

Here in Australia we don't have columnists in the largely Murdoch-run media like the late Samuel Francis. Although Francis did not criticise the financial system he was an excellent critic of U.S. immigration and multiculturalism. In particular he saw U.S. conservatives as working, intentionally or unintentionally, to undermine the American nation.

Peter Gemma is editor of a tribute to Samuel Francis' defence of American nationalism, "Shots Fired : Samuel Francis on America's Cultural War" (FGF Books, Vienna VA 2006). The book collects Francis' columns, essays and speeches. Uniting all of these pieces is a belief that a nation is a people "bound by blood, place and history". For Francis society is "a contract between the dead, the living and the yet unborn, and its proper ordering, its government as well as its social arrangements, should reflect its concrete, historical institutions, manners and memories". Take away such bonds and society soon dissolves into a war of all against all, as Thomas Hobbes once put it.

But there has been a revolution and the government no longer serves the interests of the American people. Neo-con republicans differ little from Democrats who have the same centralist one-word

In this issue: • Thought For The Week • The Echo Of Shots Fired • Australia : An Elected Dictatorship • Just Blame It On The Full Moon • Prime Minister Rudd, Feminism, Apologies And All That • Paul Keating – Obama Rudd • Marketing The Illusion Of Barak Obama

agenda. "The people and forces now in power in this country – in government, the culture and Big Business – are the enemies of the real America and the real civilisation of the West."

Francis believes that the elites rule more through the influence of culture than through the control of production (i.e., economics and finance). This is, I believe, an error of the book, where Francis accepts the philosophy, unintentionally, of enemies from the left such as the Marxist Antonio Gramsci. Clearly both the cultural domain interacts and depends upon the economic and the economic in turn upon the cultural. Social Credit has always had a non-reductionistic, sensible holistic view of social structure. The American critics are, for my taste, too much under the influence of liberalism and methodological individualism. Nevertheless this is an excellent book, well recommended for all concerned about the survival of western civilisation and our race.

AUSTRALIA : AN ELECTED DICTATORSHIP by Ian Wilson LL.B: It has been said before: Australia is an elected dictatorship. Now former Federal Court judge, Murray Wilcox QC has said it as well. Wilcox, speaking to the Law Society of the A.C.T. on May 15, 2007, slammed the Howard government over its proposal that funding for the States would be contingent upon the States introducing performance-based pay for teachers, as well as also transferring their product liability powers to the Federal government.

Murray Wilcox observed that the Commonwealth has been using finance to influence State policy for years, but now the practice is accelerating, indicating "serious deficiencies in the quality of our democracy". He said: "It seems inherently wrong that, without any constitutional or parliamentary mandate, the Commonwealth should overrule State and Territory ministers and officials in respect of management issues within the latter's constitutional domain."

Wilcox suggests that these deficiencies in our democracy can be addressed by measures such as having the Speaker of the House of representatives resign from his/her party, increasing the use of "conscience votes" in Parliament and strengthening the distinction between Commonwealth and State powers. On the latter issue, Wilcox did not address the centralist philosophy which has gripped the High Court of Australia since its creation. Ask yourself why, time after time, based on the most flimsy of arguments, centralist judgements have always been delivered? I conjecture, for one reason or another, the Courts have not been sufficiently separated or insulated from the culture of politics. Public policy considerations - typically of a centralist nature – have held the day.

The answer is political decentralism and devolution of powers as C.H. Douglas, L. Kohr and E.F. Schumacher have all observed. (My thanks here to James Reed.) To begin this process it is vital to break up the power of the political parties. Party power politics is inconsistent with representative democracy, for the representative's primary loyalty must be to the party, not the electorate. Our legal system is only as good as the general society which we have.

JUST BLAME IT ON THE FULL MOON by James Reed: How to explain the madness of the human condition?

Example 1: economic globalisation. One would have thought that a "developing country" like India, with so many people literally dying in the streets would never have a labour shortage problem. But now India is bringing in cheap Mexican labour for its software industry! So how to explain the pattern : where does Mexico get its cheap labour from for its development and so on? Eventually we have to be the new Third World. But wait Mr. Rootless Cosmopolitan – how does that impact on the global conspiracy for our racial elimination? Oops, didn't think that far ahead...

Example 2 : Third World development. The new nation of East Timor, would, one would think be busy addressing issues such as health and poverty – but – defence planners want an army, navy and air force, all with real big missiles. This is to protect Timor Sea oil and gas interests as well as illegal fishermen. Well the former should be protected by the capitalist nations that benefit, and the latter requires only a second hand boat from Australia and a few rifles from the 1996 Howard gun-grab (remember?).

Example 3 : the U.S.A. wants to install a network of missile defences in Eastern Europe to shoot down missiles that may be launched from Iran. Naturally enough, Russia doesn't think too highly of this and Russia may point its own missiles on European targets. President Vladimir Putin said in an interview with The Times, 5/6/07: "It is obvious that if part of the strategic nuclear potential of the U.S. is located in Europe and will be threatening us, we will have to respond."

And it gets better: "This system of missile defence on one side and the absence of this system on the other ... increases the possibility of unleashing nuclear conflict." It seems that these grim, constipated men, living on saturated fat and alcohol, are never happy unless they are threatening everybody with nuclear annihilation. Iran does not have missiles with the range, so the threatening nuclear war will be all for nothing, if it happens. To lift another quote from the good Red President : "Is it not sort of funny? It would be funny if it were not so sad." I'm laughing myself to death, slowly.

Police in Britain have found that unruly behaviour is strongly positively correlated with the full moon. Inspector Parr of the Sussex police speculates that magnetic forces may influence people's psyches and he wants British academics to investigate (The Australian, 7/6/07, p.8). As for me, I will stick with the Christian explanation of original sin to explain the crooked timber of humanity and the flaw in the human gem.

PRIME MINISTER RUDD, FEMINISM, APOLOGIES AND ALL THAT by James Reed: Well the Rudd crisis has been and gone and is now almost forgotten. Rudd's wife Ms. Therese Rein had engineered the underpayment to 58 employees her company had inherited when her business took over another company, because she moved the employees from a general award to individual contracts. Nothing illegal about that – it's good Liberal Party law. Oops. Her husband is opposing Work Place Relations. Not to worry, just make it a feminist, personal issue – rather than one of political consistency – and all will be well with the opinion polls. And it was.

My favourite quote came from Therese, where she said that if Kev had pressured her to sell her multimillion dollar business he would be "sleeping on the couch". I'd take the couch, ouch!

Now that is the type of woman who will soon be the de facto prime minister of Australia, our own Hillary Clinton. It makes one think we will almost miss Janine (was that her name?) Howard when Howard goes.

Kev has said he will have no trouble saying sorry to the Aborigines. I guess he has had plenty of practice at doing the ritual at home. We are going to have interesting, politically correct, times ahead. Even Paul Keating has emerged from the shadows to walk once more in TV land, giving his version of how Labor can bury us, even faster than Kev.

PAUL KEATING – OBAMA RUDD by D. West: A product of politically correct genetic engineering: "It was a warm May day when Jessica Rudd, 23, married Albert Tse, 28, at the Anglican Church Grammar School Chapel in East Brisbane." (The Weekend Australian, 7-8/7/07, p.17, Magazine. Seated at the wedding was Julia Gillard, no doubt aiming to be, one of these days, Australia's first feminist Prime Minister in the future Asian republic of Australasia. It is a really good time to be alive, isn't it? And, knowing Prime Minister Rudd's desire for us all to be good citizens of the greater Asian sphere, I am taking my first staggering steps at learning Mandarin (which Rudd speaks) and forgetting English literature. Under the great Rudd, the visions of Paul Keating will be realised. And, speaking of Paul...

Knowing that John Howard is on his last leg, that great Irish Australian Keating is there once more to tell us that John Howard is a dangerous nationalist! Yes, the man who did even more than Paul to make Australia into an Asian republic is a nationalist! In Paul's speech given to the Sydney Film School on 11 July 2007 ("PM's Arid Nationalism," The Weekend Australian, 15-15/7/07, p.29), Paul the philosopher tells us that nationalism is even more exclusionary than racism. Now would that mean that nationalism is even more exclusionary than a variety of racism such as ... anti-Semitism? Did Paul the great think it through that far?

The American equivalents of Rudd-Gillard are Hillary Clinton and Barak Obama, Democratic White House hopefuls. It doesn't really matter which one becomes president of the US, because both will do a good job of continuing the destruction of the American nation, pushing on from the horizon set by the Bush family.

Both Clinton and Obama, to make migrants and ethnics happy, voted against making English the official language of America. And both for voted for giving illegal aliens social security benefits. Know the tune? All the rest can be hummed along with.

So the next stage in the operation will be cultural: The average punter has been bashed by the Right on the right side of his/her head for too long. It is time for a change of pace. Now the left side of the head gets a good work-over for god knows how many years. And down civilisation goes again. And then it will be time for the Right fist to address the right side of Everyman's head again. No wonder there is no change: Everyman after a few centuries of this has few functioning brain cells!

MARKETING THE ILLUSION OF BARAK OBAMA by Brian Simpson: The U.S. marketing machine is moving off at full speed promoting "black" Democrat presidential candidate Barak Obama as the right man to take the place of George W. Bush. Obama being "black" is pushed as a "trailblazing" figure, who "represents the future". And what is that future?

White Americans are not told, but anyone with a grain of demographic knowledge can see that the future of America is one where whites become a minority in the next few decades.

This apocalypse will happen faster than any so-called global warming or environmental meltdown. White Americans, like Australians, are expected to not merely passively accept this fate but embrace it as a moral imperative.

Barak, however, is not "black" as such but of mixed race, a black father and a white mother and his father was not what used to be called a "Negro". He cannot claim to have an ancestor who was a slave – and that could be his downfall among American "Negroes". Black is not just black, however much the spin doctors package it.

Barak has been said to be "handsome" and "fresh". If one looks at his face as one would a Hollywood plastic surgeon, couldn't a non-racial critique be made of jug-like ears, pointy chin and smallish head? If the debate is put at the level of beauty, rather than moral integrity, that is precisely the sort of considerations one is led to. Will the American political debate ultimately get down to the level of a beauty contest? What a way for America to go!

Australians take note of what is happening in and to America – it is happening in and to Australia as well.
