THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK: "A party of economists was climbing the Alps. After several hours they became hopelessly lost. One of them studied the map for some time, turning it up and down, sighting distant landmarks, consulting his compass, and finally the sun.

Finally he said: "O.K. See that big mountain over there?" "Yes," answered the others eagerly. "Well, according to the map, we're standing on top of it."

Orthodox economists do not have a noted reputation for knowing not only where they set off from, but also and more importantly, where they want to take us."

ANOTHER VIEW ON THE IMMIGRATION 'REVOLUTION': The immigration revolution: can Europe be the same with different people in it? by Ed West Politics Blogs Home: "Something explosive is about to hit the British political arena, a book with ideas so shocking it will change the debate on the most important issue in European politics. For years, the European political class have told their peoples that mass immigration was beneficial, inevitable and historically precedented.

It enriched our lives, it boosted our economy, it made us better people morally and it was a continuation of our countries' histories of immigration, and anyone who disagrees is a racist bigot. The ruling class kitted the emperor out in his fancy new clothes and if people could not see them then there was something wrong with their eyes.

Well, the emperor is butt-naked and Financial Times journalist Christopher Caldwell is the little boy. The publication of his book "Reflections on the Revolution in Europe" is a pivotal moment in the debate on immigration, and it heralds the start of a new era – an acceptance by the political mainstream that our system isn't working, and that while a multi-racial society can work, the more multi-racial it is the less well it functions.

Caldwell is a reasonable, moderate man who has studied Europe and Islam for a decade, which makes his conclusions all the more astonishing. He argues that mass immigration and the formation of large ethnic bodies makes us unhappier as people, it damages rather than helps the economy, and threatens the basic principles of freedom. Most alarming of all, he shows just how deluded are those liberal thinkers who believe large Muslim immigrant communities can be assimilated into Europe, especially a hedonistic atheist Europe which has recently adopted values at odds with the rest of humanity.

Immigration of the sort we've had since the war is simply unprecedented. Part of the propaganda pumped out by the establishment is that Britain is a nation of immigrants.

But, as Calwell writes: "Aside from the invasions of Angles, Saxons, and Jutes that started in the fourth century AD – and which brought, at the very most, 250,000 new settlers over a period of several centuries – British 'stock' has changed little. Only about 10,000 people arrived with the Norman Conquest. Tens of thousands more Huguenots came after the revocation of the Edict of Nantes in 1685. But, all told, three-quarters of the ancestors of contemporary Britons and Irish were already present in the British Isles 7,500 years ago. DNA from people who arrived after that makes up only 12 per cent of the Irish gene pool."

In fact before 1945 there had only been one example of such immigration in Europe's history and that was, ironically, produced by Nazi Germany.

"Europe's path to mass immigration owes something to the intellectual habits of the statesmen and magnates who ran Europe's economy in World War II – on both the Allied and Axis sides. In scale, today's massive in-migration of 'temporary' labour has only one precedent, and it is a recent one."

Nazi Germany is the key to all of this, the reason why we are unable to balance our Christian disdain for racism and our willingness to allow minority communities to live here with common sense. No society in history would ever have dreamed of doing what Europe did after 1945, inviting vastly different people over in such numbers, for the simple reason that no other society was so wracked with guilt and self-loathing for its "two historic misdeeds, colonialism and Nazism".

This, combined with pressure from big business, which wanted cheap labour to run heavy industry (most of which was on its last legs anyway), and a welfare state that discouraged natives from taking menial jobs, caused Europe's leaders to invite people in such large numbers as to make future ethnic conflict inevitable.

Caldwell continues: "If one abandons the idea that Western Europeans are rapacious and exploitative by nature, and that Africans, Asians, and other would-be immigrants are inevitably their victims, then the fundamental differences between colonisation and labour migration cease to be obvious." And what we have in the suburbs of France and the inner cities of Holland and England is, whatever that word's pejorative meaning, colonisation.

Enoch Powell and his 'rivers of blood': The reason Enoch Powell was wrong in predicting rivers of blood was that Powell, who loved the British Empire, did not understand the widespread feelings of liberal guilt among the middle class, nor that this would be transmitted to the nation as a whole (even though the poor had no reason to feel guilty about anything, and indeed would feel the worst effects of immigration).

And yet Powell's population forecasts were spot on. He shocked his Rotary Club audience in 1968 by suggesting Britain's non-white population would be 4.5 million in 2002 (in 2001 it was 4,635,296).

Then in 1970 he told voters in Wolverhampton that between a fifth and a quarter of their city, as well as that of Birmingham and Inner London, would be non-white one day. According to the 2001 census the figures were 22.2 per cent, 29.6 per cent and 34.4 per cent respectively, and rising. The subtitle asks: "Can Europe be the same with different people in it?" The answer, quite clearly, is no."

ONE OF THOSE 'UNREHEARSED' EVENTS OF HISTORY? by Betty Luks: South Australia's Labor party had plans for a referendum at next year's State election. They wanted to reduce the numbers and length of their terms in the Legislative Council (Upper House) of State Parliament. Even though Labor has the numbers in the Legislative Assembly, when the Bill came before the House, it was defeated by one vote – 23 to 24. (Advertiser, 10/9/09)

The reason why? On the night the vote was taken, the parliamentary wine club was also meeting, and ten members of parliament (including Premier Mike Rann and Opposition leader Isobel Redmond) were not in the House for the vote! If two Independents hadn't voted for the Bill the numbers would have been worse than losing by one vote!

ADOLF RIDES AGAIN! from Len the Cleaner: Following Betty Luks' advice to get out and enjoy spring, I must say that I feel somewhat regenerated, so much so that I will muscle in on James Reed's territory. An AIDS awareness group "has come under fire" from Jewish groups and AIDS prevention advocates for a video showing a couple having sex, with the punch-line being that the grinning male is Adolf Hitler. The closing message is "AIDS is a mass murderer".

Why are these groups upset: after all, old Adolf is called a "mass murderer"? Would they be upset if the face was that of a Middle Eastern drug dealer, an Eskimo or Donald Duck? No, the idea that Adolf could get down and have the sort of sordid sex that trendoids have in gym centre car parks, is now politically incorrect. What will be their next complaint?

THE MODERN GEN X WOMAN AND NEW AGE NONSENSE by Len the Cleaner: Now that I have got over the clean air of Spring, I turn my critical powers to deserving subjects. Among generation X and Y, a concern with 'spiritual healers', finding your right 'self', 'spiritual journeys' and the like are all the rage. Recently journalist/radio personality Amber Petty ("Seeing the Light", The Advertiser, 10/9/09, p.18) addressed this topic. She took all of this stuff seriously but warned people that spiritual healers are human too and even your best friendly neighbourhood medium, sage, sooth etc. could slump it and slum it and do a bit of "indecent assault on his clients". A fair warning I suppose.

Turning the page of the same edition of The Advertiser ("The Doomsday List", p.19) we find a somewhat sympathetic article about those who think doomsday will come because of numerical events; 2012 is a popular date being the end of the Aztec calendar. But could it not be that 2012 is the end of the Aztec calendar because great multicultural Aztec mathematicians reasoned that everybody would have been cannibalised and sacrificed by that date?

In times of genuine crisis, nonsense flourishes. It diverts attention from real, practical areas of concern such as economics, ecology, the sustainability of fresh water and the preservation of soil. These topics are not trendy and sexy enough to be dealt with, with the attention they deserve.

The New Age movement, above all else, is an opiate for the chattering class, to keep them numb about real issues of concern. This is of course overkill on the part of the elites, since these people would not do anything anyway.

LOVE CAN'T BUY ME MONEY! ALL YOU NEED IS CASH! by James Reed: I want to go on record as saying that I think that the Beatles' music is popular trash. Members of the Klan were right to burn discs, saying that the music represented cultural decadence. Consider the hysteria of the girls lining the streets, throwing their underwear and wetting themselves. The Beatles contributed to a breakdown in sexual morality which other groups took further. If you doubt me, switch on music TV programs and watch the filth that is now pumped into the brains of young people.

Daniel Finkelstein ("All You Need is Capitalism", The Australian, 11/9/09, p.12) argues that the Beatles did not represent counterculture but capitalism. Jewish homosexual Brian Epstein packaged them in his management and channelled their sexual energy. Agreed. But Epstein overdosed on sleeping pills in 1967 and most of the Beatles' drug-influenced records occurred after that. And of course we have the anti-Christian remarks of ego-maniac John Lennon, who liked to see himself as an alternative Marxist-Christ. Imagine is a hymn of globalisation and cosmopolitanism. But imagine...

Imagine there are no pinkos, its easy if you try / no need to fight this insane fight, no reason now to die / imagine no immigration, people looking after their world / no more greed or financial hunger / no more brotherhood of man. You may say I'm a dreamer / and you would be right / but I hope that you will join us, and fight the good fight.

THE INSANE SOCIETY by James Reed: Eric Fromm wrote a book called "The Sane Society". Yes, he was a Marxist and all that, but one thing of merit stuck in my mind: the idea that society can lose its head and go insane. Consider: because of a "recruitment crisis" the Rudd government wants women to be able to serve in all frontline combat units of the Australian Defence Force, including the SAS and commando units.

The femo-journalists were delighted with this news. Never mind that this idea has been tried and failed in Israel. For the femos, even if men on average are physically stronger than women, many women are stronger than the average man.

So be it; I am tired of this argument. Put the Amazon warriors on the frontline but don't give them a rifle, give them a spear! Let them prove their superiority by fighting with a traditional weapon. And while I am going in this direction, how about conscripting academic feminists for the frontline to solve the recruitment crisis. They could use their secret weapon of boring the enemy to death.

WHAT IS THE HEINER AFFAIR? by James Reed: I received a request from a gentleman in New South Wales to write a note on the "Heiner Affair". Enclosed in the letter were many references. The affair involves the shredding of documents by the Queensland government in 1990 that were required in evidence in imminent Court hearings. In particular the evidence relates to matters of sexual abuse, among other things, in various organisations.

See: <http://www.samuelgriffith.org.au/papers/html/volume17/v17chap1.html>.

Before formulating a definite opinion I need to do more background research but the material I have seen indicates that something fishy went on. Why shred the papers? What was on them? And – is there another copy out there? To be continued...

FALL OF THE FAMILY HERALDS COLLAPSE OF CIVILISATION by James Reed: People who divorce and hit middle age are calling it a day in the marriage stakes (The W.E. Financial Review, 22-23/09/09, p.24). Worse though, as Barry Maley cogently argues ("Love and Marriage: Rarely a Case of Happy Ever After", The Australian, 18/9/09, p.12), "marital relationships have never been more unstable in Australia". The number of marriages has increased because of Australia's rapid population growth, fuelled by immigration. The marriage rate has continually fallen since 1970.

Around one-third of all dependent children are living with a sole parent or parents in de facto relationships. De facto relationships break up more frequently than marriages, so the real divorce rate in Australia is very high.

It has been said that the family is the foundation of society. If so, the foundation of our society is disintegrating and heralding the impending collapse of civilisation.
