THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

The Lion of Freedom's anniversary: Eric Butler's life and teaching touched the lives of many, many people not just throughout Australia but in other parts of the English speaking world. One of Eric's old friends tells the boyhood story of once walking along a country road and an older youth riding a bicycle approached from the other direction. As he approached, the young boy asked the older youth on the bike: "Where are you going?" The answer came: "I'm going to save Australia." Those who knew Eric, know that was the direction he took for the rest of his life. We are too close to the history of the 20th century to know what lasting effect his lifelong work had; we will leave it to history to determine that. What we do know is Australia has lost a true son and we have lost a true friend.

Tiananmen Square anniversary of pro-democracy: Tens of thousands of people have attended a candlelight vigil in Hong Kong to mark the 22nd anniversary of the Tiananmen crackdown in Beijing. Hundreds of people were killed in the Chinese capital as soldiers and tanks moved to clear Tiananmen Square of pro-democracy demonstrators in 1989. This year's anniversary comes as China continues a crackdown on dissent, arresting dozens of activists.

"Hong Kong is an open place," said participant Tse Ting-ting at the vigil. "This is a good night for us to commemorate the group of students who tried to create freedom in China on June 4." Lee Cheuk-yan, a Hong Kong legislator and one of the organisers of the vigil, called for Beijing to release dissident artist Ai Wei Wei and other activists. "We can see that now for China, it is the darkest age for human rights. We can see all the human rights defenders being arrested and suppressed," he said. "They should start political reform and return the power to the people," Mr. Lee added.

China began arresting activists earlier in the year, as anti-government protests spread across the Middle East and North Africa.

SPENCER BREAKTHROUGH IN FEDERAL COURT: "Tower Of Hope" People Power Movement: "180 degree about face by Commonwealth and N.S.W.. On Tuesday 31st May, Peter Spencer had a very substantial breakthrough in the Federal Court, Sydney. After almost four years in both the Federal and High Courts, the legal teams representing the Commonwealth and N.S.W. negotiated and then agreed on the categories of documents for discovery to be provided by the two respondents. This left Judge Emmett with the job of issuing the order. The documents sought and agreed to are to be provided progressively between now and the next hearing set for Friday, 2 September.

For four years, the approach taken by the Australian Government Solicitor (for the Commonwealth) has been to deny the existence of any documents showing the existence of informal agreements between the Commonwealth and the States (relating to sequestration of carbon and land use change laws and measures) before and after the Kyoto meeting of the UNFCCC in 1997. Rather, counsel for the Commonwealth has repeatedly claimed that Mr. Spencer was on a "fishing expedition" and have pulled every delay and denial tactic possible to prevent Spencer v Commonwealth of Australia going to trial. However, last week there was a 180 degree about face, as the Australian Government Solicitor and the Crown Solicitor for the New South Wales Government N.S.W. changed tack from bluff and denial to negotiation. Finally, the Government law teams are complying with the High Court of Australia's judgment last September overruling the Federal Court's previous decision regarding the matter; and in the light of Spencer's meticulous research and his filing for categories of (internal Government) documents sought.

Peter Spencer is very happy that finally he and his legal team have their "foot in the door". Although the opposing legal teams have not yet handed over everything sought, it's been left open to ask the Court for additional discovery if required.

Spencer supporters are also very much heartened by news that there is a great deal of discussion in the new N.S.W. parliament in recognition of the strength of Spencer's legal position. Even more important, there is recognition and discussion about the moral case implicit in the State taking from private landholders, which has become epidemic due to pressure from both green fundamental groups pushing sustainable development policies and the precautionary principle on the one side, and the corruption of due process by big developers on the other side."

DON'T LET POLITICALLY CORRECT LAWYERS GET THEIR HANDS ON OUR CONSTITUTION! by Ian Wilson LL.B: It was a small story and you may have missed it, but it was an important one : "Abolition of Constitution's Race Power in Frame", The Australian, 19 May 2011, p.1. The discussion paper by the Prime Minister's Expert Panel on the Constitutional Recognition of Indigenous Australians wants the race power removed from the Constitution, obligate the government to make formal deals with indigenous Australians on land and cultural issues, as well as including a "broad statement of values". Gillard appointed lawyer Mark Leibler and indigenous activist Pat Dodson to head the panel.

Abolition of the race power would be a gift from heaven to politically correct lawyers and activists. It will be used to create an open borders Australia; no longer could laws be made to stop asylum seekers (who are of 'a race') coming or being detained. Who knows what Australia's lawyers will get up to if they get this one in. Don't let this happen.

IS 'THOR' REALLY A RACIAL REALIST MOVIE? by Brian Simpson: There is a big debate on the internet about the Marvel/Comic movie "Thor" which is now showing. Thor is the Marvel Comic answer to Superman, created in 1962 by Jewish writer Stan Lee (Leibler) and renowned artist Jack "the King" Kirby. Marvel's Thor had little in common with the Thor of Nordic legend in the "Eddas and Sagas". Marvel's Thor was a liberal and multiculturalist as is Thor of the movie. And this is where the debate begins.

Various white nationalist groups have boycotted the movie because black actor Idris Elba stars as Heimdall. Another Asian actor plays Hugin the Grim, Marvel Thor's mate. Thor's human love interest is Jane Foster played by Natalie Portman. Her real name is Natalie Hershlag, born June 9, 1981 in Israel.

All of this looks about as politically correct as it can get; the Nordic Thor (played by Aussie Chris Hemsworth), falling for a Jewess. But I expected Thor himself to be black, and in the Marvel Universe and Hollywood, why not? However, I would like to raise a point which no one has yet put on the net, a clear point for the racial nationalists.

In a nutshell the Thor movie is about two brothers, Thor and Loki. Raised by King Odin, only one can be king of Asgard. The movie traces Thor's fall, banishment to Earth and his redemption. But Loki also falls – from believing that he is Odin's biological son, to discovering that he is really the son of a Frost Giant, an enemy race. Loki's fall comes from this discovery and the movie is really about this, even given the attention paid to the Thor/Jane Foster relationship.

Loki at the end of the movie chooses to join the Frost Giants and turns against the race of Asgard. In other words, despite all of the political correctness, the theme that racial differences are real, can be seen in the "Thor" movie. It also can be seen in the comics because all of Thor's adventures basically arise from either Loki's racial conflict and desire for evil or from Thor's misplaced being on Earth, out of place with Earthlings. Race does matter.

In conclusion Marvel have failed with Thor, assuming that they intended to churn out a standard politically correct super-hero movie. The story of this liberal cosmopolitan superman refutes racial egalitarianism. This basic point has not been made before and yet it is obvious, and, further, makes a neat contribution to the "cultural wars". Google, where are you!

SHADOW BANKING SYSTEM: BIG ELEPHANT OR RED HERRING? Dr. Frances Hutchinson, Chair of Social Credit Secretariat, U.K.: Readers who have been following the rise and power of the Shadow Banking system over and above what has been termed 'the classical banking system' will find Dr. Frances Hutchinson's comment on the internet discussions of this 'shadowy banking group' quite revealing. It is true that the internet is truly humming with material exposing the activities of the fraudulent, corrupt, banksters, politicians, etc., but what to do about it is the real issue. Read on:

Comment on Perry Mehrling's shadow banking system – Big Elephant or Red Herring? "The shadow banking system has taken over the classical banking system in finance and is now the big elephant in the room," says Professor Perry Mehrling.

There is an old story about a group of blind men touching the limbs, trunk, tail, back of the elephant, whatever is nearest to them, in an attempt to discover the nature of the whole elephant. Perry Mehrling emerges as the latest of a series of experts with a partial answer to a very complex question. What is the financial system, and how can we tame it to our use?

On his blog, Mehrling observes: "In its essence, all banking is nothing more than a swap of IOUs. I give my banker a sheaf of papers that say, essentially, "I owe you $100,000", and my banker gives me a deposit account that says the same. The result is an alchemical conversion of my uncertain future earning prospects into current spendable cash".

All banking, shadow or otherwise, is about "future earning prospects" which will be convertible into "current spendable cash". For the vast majority of humanity today, "current spendable cash" is acquired through working as an employee.

In the recent exchange on "What a Public Bank Could Mean for California", Wallace Klinck hit the nail straight on the head when he questioned the assumption that reform of the banking system is necessary to create full employment. For the entire banking system, no matter how shadowy, to work at all, it is necessary to have an employment system so that there is something on which to spend that "current spendable cash". The banking system needs people who are willing to work for money. It needs millions and millions of people prepared to sacrifice their adult lives in service to the banking system.

Hence it appears normal to work five days a week, Monday to Friday, with weekends and Bank Holy Days off, weeks of paid 'leave', extra pay for unsocial hours of the highly skilled, and long hours with very poor pay for the mass of de-skilled labour.

The army of workers is necessary to maintain the artificial edifice of Western Civilization. There must be people willing to produce material goods, and to wheel and deal in their money values through the stages of production and on to the final consumer. There must be people willing to man the transport and communications systems, to provide the educational, medical, media and legal services. And there must also be people able and willing to give birth to new workers, and to rear them to the point when they are willing and able to be employed.

Completely miss the point of Social Credit analysis: I may seem to be labouring the point. But it is vitally necessary to do so. The financial system, in all its many shapes and forms, is built on the foundation of paid employment. So long as the failure to provide employment is seen as the main problematic outcome of threatened financial meltdown, the system will simply metamorphose indefinitely. At the present time, there would appear to be no fundamental dissatisfaction with the employment system: individuals are happy to go to work in return for "current spendable cash" to spend on their particular basket of goods. For this reason people like Ellen Brown, Mary Mellor and many, many others completely miss the point of the Social Credit analysis. The notion that modern technology, combined with an alternative bookkeeping system could revolutionise daily life, end incessant wars and make poverty amidst plenty a thing of the past, goes clean over their heads.

Above all, as Douglas observed on so many occasions, both employment and the financial system are backed by the force of law. And those laws have been drawn up under close consultation with the financial authorities. All talk of 'monetary reform' can be happily permitted on the 'red herring' principle. It draws the scent away from the real fox.

AS FOR 'SHADOW BANKING' – THIS WILL BRING A SMILE TO YOUR FACE: A Bank of America branch was taken to court and foreclosed on by a Florida couple that the bank had tried to rip off. It all started five months ago when the Bank of America filed foreclosure papers on the home of the couple who didn't owe a dime on their home. The couple said they paid cash for the house.

The case went to court and the homeowners were able to prove they didn't owe the Bank of America anything on the house. In fact it was proven that the couple never even had a mortgage bill to pay. A Collier County Judge agreed and after the hearing the Bank of America was ordered, by the court, to pay the legal fees of the homeowner, Maurenn Nyerger and her husband. The Judge said the bank wrongfully tried to foreclose on the Nyerger's house.

So, how did it end with the bank being foreclosed on? After more than 5 months of the judge's ruling, the bank still hadn't paid the legal fees, "and the homeowner's attorney did exactly what the bank tried to do to the homeowners. He seized the bank's assets.

"They've ignored our calls, ignored our letters, legally this is the next step to get my clients compensated" attorney Todd Allen told CBS. Sheriffs deputies, movers, and the Nyerger's attorney went to the bank and foreclosed on it. The attorney gave instructions to remove desks, computers, copiers, filing cabinets and any cash in the teller's drawers. After about an hour of being locked out of the bank, the bank manager handed the attorney a cheque for the legal fees.

The defence attorney says this is something that he sees often in court, banks making errors because they didn't investigate the foreclosure and it becomes "lengthy and expensive battle for the homeowner. 'As a foreclosure defense attorney this is sweet justice" says Allen.

Sweet justice. A great way to start the week: <http://www.realecontv.com/page/2924.html>
