THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK:

More and more centralisation of power: Money in the modern world is mere accountancy where a monetary unit is like a ticket or a claim to wealth. It cannot be defined properly as a 'store of value' because real things spoil, rust, corrode, wear out and obsolesce. Douglas explained that money, in an economy becoming more capital-intensive, is increasingly a means of distribution and not a means of exchange.

Economics is a dynamic process of production and consumption: Obviously, an existing stock of goods can be exchanged for an existing sum of money and vice versa as in a game of musical chairs, but this is not a true representation of the modern economy as it operates.

All money earned is a cost that must be recovered by the producer through sale of product. It is not part of a permanent money supply that is just circulating around. Money issued by a bank is money bound for return and cancellation. Monetary savings by individual consumers would not, as I understand the matter, be a major feature of a Social Credit economy. – Wallace Klinck, Canada, July 2011

BLACK MAGIC OF THE MONEY CULT'S 'DEBT' by Wallace Klinck of Canada: A response to an email enquiry. Money as debt: <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Dc3sKwwAaCU> The video by Paul Grignon has been around for quite a long time, although, I think that he updated it at some point recently. It is the usual "monetary reform" theme blaming interest for all our troubles, and seems to say, that preventing banks from charging interest by having the State issue all money as interest-free debt would solve our problems. Once some people learn, to their amazement and horror, that banks create money through lending credit, and that they require additional interest in repayment, they seem to become arrested at this point and bring in the government to end the process of "usury" – as they call it – by taking over the money-creation process.

This is more centralisation of power and certainly not Social Credit. They can't seem to get their head around the cost accountancy and pricing issues involved and the necessity not for interest-free debt but rather for actual debt-free money to assist consumption. Too bad these people do not read Douglas seriously before rushing off to expostulate on the problem.

I think that the big conceptual problem is that economists wax independently in a world of heady theory, while accountants simply do their job with a two dimensional art in a three dimensional world – and the two professions never really attempt meaningfully to communicate with each other. So events just march on and problems intensify without any realistic resolution.

For those who haven't done so: Listen to Jeremy Lee on MP3 explain "The New World Order and Global Debt" here...

HOW'S THE DEBT CLOCK GOING? HAVE A LOOK FOR YOURSELF: Here... www.debtclock.com.au Here... www.debtclock.com.au When I looked at Australia's National Debt – now in the Billions of Dollars and the figures keep spiralling up so fast that I can't type quick enough to give an accurate figure for the time of day - my share was $7,687. 00. Phew!

I think I will migrate to Tasmania. Whilst watching the figures tick over I noticed Tasmania's STATE DEBTS were actually decreasing. Tasmanians must be paying off their money debts at a faster rate than they are adding to them.

National Credit Card Debt: As for the Credit Card Debt, the speed with which the debt-figures keep rising makes me dizzy. The National Credit Card Debt was $51,644,572,207.00 at time of typing. 'They' said my share of the Credit Card debt was $3,551.00. How can this be? I don't have that type of debt Credit Card!

'BIG AUSTRALIA': THE IMMIGRATION WAR AGAINST TRADITIONAL AUSTRALIA: The League Immigration Special, by Brian Simpson: The government's sustainable population strategy was released on May 14, 2011. Set to give an answer to the big Australia debate, where on current immigration levels Australia would top 36 million (some say 40 million) people by 2050, the report does not set population or immigration targets. Tony Burke, Sustainable Population Minister, is basically a mass migration type and said that the "greater cultural diversity increases the vibrancy of Australian society and helps to build our relationships with other nations". (The Australian, May 11, 2011, p.4) A silly position that does not withstand analysis: do the "other nations" need this diversity (e.g., homogenous China and Japan) to be loved by us? And isn't it "racist" to relate vibrancy with cultural diversity?

While a number of journalists and academics lamented that the strategy did not embrace the Australia unlimited vision as much as they would have liked, the fact of the matter is that Kevin Rudd's big Australia is already embraced by Gillard. Immigration Minister Chris Bowen has announced an 11% increase in the 2011/2012 permanent migration program to reach 185,000 places (with 4000 extra humanitarian places). This does not include 457 temporary workers or international students (also directly linked to migration).

At the present immigration rate Australia will reach 36 million by 2050, with White Australians becoming a racial minority. The values and culture of Anglo-Australia, the Constitutional monarchy, even English language as the language of the nation, will be gone. This is what the champions of big Australia and Asianisation will give us. I say: to hell with mining booms, service jobs and the slimy economy itself!

This is incredible stuff: According to Professor Peter Van Onselen (Winthrop professor at the University of Western Australian) ("Pollies are Blind to the Bigger Picture", The Weekend Australian, May 14-15, 2011, p.14) "our political leaders are loathe to stridently back what most economists want: large-scale immigration as a mechanism towards ensuring strong economic growth". Incredible: even the Bureau of Immigration Research concluded that immigration had only small positive benefits

(remember that costs have to be considered too). Even as we saw above that current immigration levels are set to give us big Australia, van Onselen says:

"Our politicians on both sides of the major party divide pander to uninformed opposition to large-scale immigration". Presumably, having the entire population of the Earth in Australia, even in Sydney, even at the University of Western Australia - even in Peter's own house - would not be enough, for in neo-classical economic wonderland, there are no limits to growth.

Interestingly enough van Onselen sets the score right on John Howard: "No one was more on top of the importance of lifting Australia's immigration numbers than John Howard. He quietly did so for years". True indeed. To read about how John Howard's immigration policy helped establish an Asian technoclass in Australia see "The Howard Legacy" available from Heritage Book Services.

Australian MP Michael Danby and Israeli Danny Danon believe Israel should "Send African migrants to Australia" writes Lahav Harkovin in the Jerusalem Post, 06/30/2011 16:35. Danon and Danby discussed the issue during the Australian politician's visit to Israel for the World Jewish Congress's International Conference of Jewish Parliamentarians.

DO YOUR KIDS GET TO EAT IN THE FUTURE? THE CHINESE BUY-UP OF AUSSIE FARMS

by James Reed: Across the world China is spending its newly acquired money wealth to buy up farm land to supply the Chinese elites with food when the horsemen of the ecological apocalypse come riding our way. Prime farmland across Australia has been gobbled up by Chinese investors, including tens of thousands of hectares of timber plantations. Apart from taking food resources, China is buying up farms where coal lies beneath their soils. A Chinese government mining firm, Shenhua Watermark Coal, has already bought up 43 farms outside of the N.S.W. township of Gunnedah. The Chinese government will soon seek permission for a coalmine on the Liverpool plains. And of course it will be granted. A farming community will become a hole in the ground.

The Foreign Investment Review Board permits this buy up of Australia. This situation, which would not be tolerated in Asian countries such as Thailand, is another parallel to the race destruction theme. Australians have been so done-over by anti-nationalism and globalism that they rejoice in selling off the nation. Many farmers happily sold to the Chinese for a profit and 'skipped to the loo my darlin'. With their bag of money. Rich, fertile farmland will be destroyed and who knows what damage could be done to the water table and ground water.

The end goal of our traitorous leaders is to see Australia become a vast toxic rubbish dump. No doubt within a few years all of the world's nuclear waste will be sitting in our back yard. We Australians are the turkey which not only willingly and joyfully puts its neck on the chopping block, but it helps its executioner by banging its neck against the axe.

LET'S LOOK FOR COAL UNDER QUEEN JULIA'S CASTLE by Peter West: It is not just agricultural land that is threatened by mining mania: miners were denied a permit to look for coal under Toowoomba. (The Australian, June 23, 2011, p.1) Exploration is already reaching within 500m of homes in Sydney and Brisbane. This probably indicates that existing coal reserves are starting to be depleted. The Chinese appetite for coal is virtually infinite and in time will absorb all of Australia's reserves.

There will be nothing left for future Australians. But our breed of Capitalists are particularly short-sighted and unlike older generations who tried to do some good for the community, and thought about future capitalists, they want the world now. They live for today. If they can make good money with a deal today that kills them tomorrow - they will take it. Welcome to the insane society.

ALLWHITE POISON? by Brian Simpson: Federal draft dietary guidelines have come under criticism from some food scientists for advancing the myth that sugar is as dangerous as fats and salt. The claim has been made that unlike salt, sugar does not do any direct harm to the human body. (The Australian, June 23, 2011, p.3) Actually some fats, such as Omega-3's are essential to life and so are small quantities of sodium, usually found in natural food, but to excess in processed foods.

A couple of slices of bread virtually gives you one's sodium limit, showing how salty our bread is. Salt, like sugar, is added to food to make one eat more. Sugar has made the young fat, especially the massive amounts in soft drink. (High fructose corn syrup, like that used in soft drink, has been said to be more addictive than cocaine – Ed) It stresses insulin production and, it has been argued, is implicated in the diabetes epidemic. Saturated fats, trans fats, salt and sugar are all a major part of the fast "food" business and it is this toxic sludge which is harming the younger generation.

OVERSEAS STUDENTS AND MASS MIGRATION by James Reed: Some indication of the role that overseas students have played in recent migration has been given by figures mentioned in the Australian Financial Review (June 6, 2011, p.7) A big drop in numbers, from a peak of 315,000 per annum to a projected 160,000 this year (I will believe that figure when I come to believe Queen Julia can walk on eggs without breaking them), is allegedly due to a fall in the number of international students staying in Australia after completing their studies. John Howard's government, in a bid to fast track the creation of an Asian Australia elite, allowed such students to stay while waiting applications for permanent residency. No one went home and the rorts were many.

If it is true that net overseas migration will stabilise at around 180,000 a year, that still means that non-Whites will be a majority in Australia about the same time as they are in the United States and Britain: 30 years time. Some estimates put the date sooner. The real immigration debate is about race and that debate has yet to occur.

AUSTRALIA'S ABORIGINES IN GAOL by Brian Simpson: The Parliamentary Report, Doing Time - Time for Doing, reports that there are more indigenous juveniles in gaol today than at any time since the Aboriginal 'deaths in custody' Royal Commission handed down its report in April 1991. The detention rate for indigenous juveniles is 397 per 100,000 compared to non-indigenous juveniles at 14 per 100,000, 28 times higher. A summary in The Australian, 21 June 2011, p.3 also says "Indigenous juveniles account for 59% of the total juvenile population across the country" – which if true, means that Australia would be on the way to having a majority indigenous population in a generation, which is somewhat counter-common sense. Indigenous Australians make up 2.5% of the population but 25% of all prisoners in our gaols are indigenous. And the percentages are increasing: between 2000 and 2010, the number of indigenous prisoners in gaol increased 55% for men and 47% for women. The Committee was concerned that little has changed "given increased funding". Their view is that governments have failed to address "chronic disadvantage in indigenous communities". Recommendations include a new COAG agreement to reduce gaoling rates and to register foetal alcohol spectrum disorder in Aboriginal communities as a disability.

These are good recommendations but deal with only the tip of the iceberg. The shocking level of domestic violence and child sexual abuse in Aboriginal communities has been raised as a crisis issue by Aboriginal women leaders, but the wealthy White suburban feminists, drunk on political correctness, won't touch this issue. Meanwhile...suffer the children and women.
