THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

It is disappointing but not surprising that Australians for a Constitutional Monarchy has failed to oppose outright the campaign for constitutional recognition of indigenous Australians ('Royalists recognise need for change', 18/2). Its stance differs from the much wiser unequivocal rejection of such change by the Australian Monarchist League and the pro-monarchy Australian League of Rights.

Since the 1999 constitutional referendum there have always been doubts about the royalist credentials of ACM. At that time some of its spokespeople appeared very half-hearted in public support for the Queen. One also wonders just how 'conservative' Damien Freeman and Julian Leaser really are with their quite unnecessary proposal for a US-style 'Declaration of Recognition'. Australians should beware of all those (including the Australian Christian Lobby) who in any way advocate the admission into our political order of this Trojan horse.

Biggest Issue for 2015: The biggest issue coming up for Australians in 2015 is the Prime Minister’s ‘recognise’ campaign. If you are worried about Australia’s sovereignty then this must cause you concern and it has the support of the communists! You might like to check the ‘Green Left Weekly’ website here... <https://www.greenleft.org.au/node/58184>

Another article written by Gary Foley should be of interest; about 50 years ago Mr Foley said his goal in life was to ‘smash Christianity’ when employed with an Aboriginal legal service. www.kooriweb.org/foley/resources/pdfs/229.pdf

Then there is another article ‘The struggle for rights and freedoms’ used to brainwash Australian school students ... see here <http://www.skwirk.com.au/> The communists have been involved in the ‘Aboriginal Protest Movement’ from way-back in the early 1930’s and this has been followed along by the Socialist Left... see GLW website above. We must counter Prime Minister, Tony Abbott’s endorsement of ‘recognition’ in the Australian Constitution at every turn and add to his unpopularity. Perhaps we will find allies in the multicultural movement.

INVISIBLE SERF'S COLLAR

"a group which desires to be strong has no use for the man who claims to think for himself."

What terms commonly used actually mean: Chanced upon Robin Eubanks' website and thought our readers would appreciate what he wrote: My name is Robin Eubanks and I am an attorney. Not the sort who represents or defends people in a courtroom. I figure things out. Usually about what drives a business or industry, how it makes its money, and what the risks are to its revenue model. I started off in Big Law doing corporate work and then helped start a legal department for a small healthcare company that grew to be a New York stock-exchange traded company. Healthcare turned into an excellent background for my current work in education as government regulation and special privileges drive the everyday dynamics of what raises money and creates costs. A background in Law is also excellent preparation for determining precisely what the terms commonly used actually mean. Especially in an industry that is consciously using language to hide the actual intended goals. My experience allowed me to recognize that education in the US and globally has been, for decades, engaged in a massive Newspeak (as in George Orwell's 1984) campaign that creates a public illusion on what is being promised and what is coming to the schools and classrooms that are this country's future. I know what the words and terms really mean to an Ed insider and how it differs from the common public perception. I have documented what was really behind the reading wars and math wars. I have pulled together what the real intended Common Core implementation looks like. And it is wildly different from the PR sales job used to gain adoption in most of the states.

<http://www.invisibleserfscollar.com/knowledge-to-avoid-becoming-roadkill-on-the-bipartisan-global-road-to-dignity-by-2030/>

For me the English language is both a sword and a shield. I have documented what is really going on, written a book describing how and why education became a weapon, and now we are going to talk about what the real Common Core implementation looks like in various communities in the US in this busy Summer of 2012.

Knowledge to Avoid Becoming Roadkill on the Bipartisan Global Road to Dignity by 2030, February 14, 2015

Sorry for such a graphic metaphor, but somehow reading all the plans to "transform the world to better meet human needs" made me think we have a global class of politicians and cronies, at every level of government, who actually view ordinary people and poverty as their excuse to be in charge and live at our expense in the 21st Century. Human needs and poverty are just excuses for Power where "change in the management of our economies" is the new rationale for Fascism. It prevents at every level ordinary individuals from making their own choices about what they want and what they value. Back in December 2014, UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-Moon issued the Post-2015 Global Marching Orders Governments at all Levels are now going about fulfilling. The report is called "The road to dignity by 2030: ending poverty, transforming all lives and protecting the planet."

"Young people will be the torchbearers" of this vision of "inclusive and shared prosperity" grounded in a "human right" to have the State ensure that "social needs" are met, enforceable under the rule of law (reimagined just like federalism). Not interested in having the UN declare that your life must be transformed? Nobody intends to ask any of our permission. The world simply needs "more effective governance and capable institutions, for new and innovative partnerships, including with responsible business and effective local authorities, and for a data revolution." That last, of course, gets provided both by the digital learning mandates and by the Internet of Things and social media. That's probably why how to gather and use all this data for new kinds of governments was the focus this week for yet another get together we were not invited to. <https://www.thegovernmentsummit.org/en/knowledgehub.html> - Ban Ki-Moon was there though and so was Sir Ken Robinson making sure the global vision of "quality learning for all" remained on track. Expensive Consultants were there and ready to advise governments and discuss the "key role of business" in satisfying these global plans. "Companies are ready to change how they do business and to contribute by transforming markets from within and making production, consumption and the allocation of capital more inclusive and sustainable." Nobody asked us, the existing customers and taxpayers...

SOUTH AFRICAN RACIAL REALITIES by Richard Miller

An article in The Advertiser (September 13, 2014) on the conviction of Oscar Pistorius for shooting Reeva Steenkamp says that the shooting "is indicative of a country living in fear" and that the South Africans are armed because an attack could come at any time: "The society is bleeding socially, politically and economically so the fear of being attacked... stems from that decaying society."

Selecting another mainstream article on South Africa (Daily Mail Australia, June 29, 2013, at <http://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-2351339/...>) we find some clues about who it is that South Africans are afraid of: "Mandela's passing and looming threat of a race war against South Africa's whites... Fears rise that killings are part of a systemic bid to drive white people out of South Africa ... President Jacob Zuma known to sing 'struggle song' about killing white Afrikaners." Remember – that is from the mainstream press.

Should one be surprised that in a country with one of the highest homicide rates in the world, people are armed? And we should not be surprised, as the multicult self-destructs, that the gun-banners work around the clock to make sure that, other than the oppressive apparatus, only the criminals have guns.

ABORIGINAL LAND RIGHTS AND AUSTRALIA'S SOVEREIGNTY

The following information was published by the Australian League of Rights in the May 1984 edition of the Intelligence Survey, in an effort to warn the Australian people what, and who, were behind the push for 'land rights' for the Aboriginal folk. Australians continued about their everyday affairs not recognising the dangers to our national sovereignty. Over thirty years later the screws are being tightened as we are being forced tighter and tighter in the New World Order vice. Australia's Aboriginal folk are being used for purposes other than their own well-being – the truth is they are but 'meat in the sandwich' when it comes to the real political agenda of the world elites.

Remember the following was written in 1984 - over thirty years ago:

"The Commonwealth Government, under the zealous hand of Aboriginal Affairs Minister Clyde Holding, has embarked on a policy for "Aboriginal Land-Rights" which will not only take it into a constitutional minefield, but will, if taken as far as possible, threaten the Australian continent with a type of balkanisation into racial "ghettos", and also compromise Australia's Federal system, its communications, its defence and its relative lack of racial disharmony.

To achieve this package of disasters the Government will rely not so much on the considered constitutional will of the Australian people - a process amply provided for in the Constitution itself - as on a series of premises derived by the United Nations Organisation and its agencies. These premises, or, as High Court Justice Wilson described them in 1982, "international arrangements", will be imposed on all Australians, including the Aboriginals, by a radical mis-use of Section 51(29) of the Constitution, which gives the Commonwealth Government power over "external affairs".

If this policy is consummated, the ultimate decision on what happens inside Australia will be determined not by elected parliaments within constitutional limits, interpreted where necessary by a High Court which uses the expressed will of the Australian people as its criterion. It will be determined by the International Court of Justice, which sits in the Peace Palace in the Hague, which is owned by the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace....

The West Australian (August 22, 1983) carried the following article, under the heading "Aboriginal Call to Adopt U.N.

Policy": "The Federal Government would be urged to ratify a United Nations agreement and make Aborigines' rights an international issue, an Aboriginal spokesman said yesterday on his return from Geneva. Mr. Paul Coe, one of a four-man delegation to a meeting of a working party of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights, said that the delegation would attempt to meet the Prime Minister,

Mr. Hawke, and the Minister for Aboriginal Affairs, Mr. Holding, next week. He said that Australia had signed U.N. Convention 107, which guarantees self-determination and rights to indigenous peoples in all signatory nations, but had not ratified it. The delegation would ask for immediate ratification and an assurance that Aboriginal rights would be respected in all States. The Franklin Dam decision had put paid to arguments that this could not be done because of states' rights, Mr. Coe said. The delegation said in its submission to the U.N. working party: 'We consider that violations of human rights by wealthy countries such as Australia are especially reprehensible'. The submission dealt with wide-ranging Aboriginal discontent, from State Government inaction on racism to health care, employment, education, mining, land rights and social justice, and quoted from a World Council of Churches report compiled in 1981. The U.N. has no direct say in the internal policies of member nations, but it can exert significant moral pressure on governments seeking a good international image. The group's submission condemned mining as the major single threat to Aboriginal communities across Australia." (Emphasis added) The background to this submission requires the attention of all thinking Australians.

CHINA'S DEBT TO SIR ISAAC NEWTON

by Brian Simpson

At present it is academic chic to claim that China invented almost everything, and the West, nothing of significance. It is therefore interesting to come across N. Kollerstrom's article: "How Newton Inspired China's Calendar," A&G, October 2000. Sir Isaac Newton published in 1702 his Theory of the Moon's Motion, which gave a way of finding the Moon's longitude, which could be used to find universal time and in longitude at sea.

The theory had been extensively used in the 18th century in Europe, but had been neglected in the 20th century. The reason for this was that the theory of the moon did not make use of his gravitational theory. Contrary to the China worshippers in the West, the Chinese regarded a theory of universal gravitation as "ideologically unsound" and the Chinese, even as late as the 18th century, accepted a geocentric world view, believing that the Earth was stationary and that the Sun revolved around it. This alone should challenge the school of thought that holds that China invented all science.

Consequently, not wanting to accept Western ideas beyond necessity, Newton's theory of the moon's motion was used by the Chinese for eclipse prediction and in the construction of its calendar which was used well into the 20th century.

FROM MY FILES: ANGLO-AUSTRALIAN MATHEMATICAL EXCELLENCE by Brian Simpson

Readers may be aware that even those who write on 'Race and IQ' promote the idea that East Asians are intellectually superior to "Whites"; such as the so-called "race realist" school. Jared Taylor is one example of this. Actually their statistic is that the mean of White IQs = 100, the mean of East Asian IQs = 105. But that in itself (which I believe is mistaken) says nothing about IQs to the right of the bell curve.

Whenever I see examples of Anglo-Australian high intelligence I like to note and file them. In this context consider the case of Alex Gunning, as reported last October 18-19, 2014 in The Weekend Australian Magazine. He was the 17-year old who in July last year won a gold medal at the 55th International Mathematical Olympiad with a perfect score. Usually the Chinese, Americans, Russians and Koreans get the gold medals, but last July an Australian got one.

AT LAST! AUSTRALIANS HAVE HAD TO WAKE UP!

Thanks to David Pascoe's Facebook page for the following, but I do have to ask: "Where the hell have the Australian authorities been all this time? What have they been employed and paid for? All this was well known by people wanting good soil, good food and good health.

David Pascoe writes: Pollution is normal in Chinese food regions – and not giving a damn about our people's health has clearly become the new norm for Australian governments.

More Yum: Why the Chinese want to build a coal mine in the middle of the Liverpool Plains food bowl – and the NSW Government wants to allow them.

Berries polluted by this toxic river: Frozen berries recalled from Australian supermarkets freezers were grown and packed in one of China's most polluted provinces.

Experts warned Australians are at risk of infection from superbugs and drugs on food grown in countries such as China which use human excrement as fertiliser. The warnings came as nine people have been diagnosed with Hepatitis A in a contaminated food scare.

"A lot of the countries [from] where we are importing food have waterways that are contaminated with sewage," Professor Peter Collignon, infectious diseases expert from the Australian National University said yesterday.

Since its original publication in 1977, "The Unsettling of America" has been recognized as a classic of American letters. In it, Wendell Berry argues that good farming is a cultural development and spiritual discipline. But today's agribusiness takes farming out of its cultural context and away from families, and as a nation we are thus more estranged from the land - from the intimate knowledge, love, and care of it. Sadly, as Berry notes in this edition, his arguments and observations are even more relevant than ever. We continue to suffer loss of community, the devaluation of human work, and the destruction of nature under an economics dedicated to the mechanistic pursuit of products and profits. Although "this book has not had the happy fate of being proved wrong,"

Berry writes, there are good people working "to make something comely and enduring of our life on this earth." Wendell Berry is one of those people, writing and working, as ever, with passion, eloquence, and conviction.

WAITING FOR US TO PASS by John Ferguson

Two letters appeared in The Weekend Australian Magazine, February 7-8, 2015 (i.e., section 18D defence, good faith comment on published source, etc., etc., for the nervous) stating that it was a wee bit odd that all of those peaceful Muslims were not taking to the streets or whatever, protesting about the atrocities performed in the name of Islam.

One letter says: "I suspect the majority of Muslims in this country believe that our culture is wrong and are waiting to be able to live according to their culture and laws in our country. The radicals are paving the way."

A point well taken. After a certain threshold mass migration leads to the majority population, once Anglo Saxon, being diluted until they become racial minorities, and the once unified society becomes not a "nation of tribes" ("nation" comes from the Latin word "natio" meaning "tribe" or race and a "tribe of tribes" is nonsense) – but a state. And a slowly disintegrating one at that.

States are de-racinated entities which need not have even a single "national" language. The fate of a multicultural deracinated "Australia" will be the end of the Constitutional monarchy and a Republic by default and zero chance of achieving social credit aims. Mass immigration, a Fabian strategy is a breath from achieving the end of traditional Australia.

Immigration Chief's Australia Day speech: Australia Not Even a European Country

FIDDLING WITH TEMPERATURE DATA BIGGEST SCIENCE SCANDAL EVER

“...that particular stretch of the Arctic is where ice is affected by warmer water brought in by cyclical shifts in a major Atlantic current – this last peaked at just the time 75 years ago when Arctic ice retreated even further than it has done recently.”

Source: Christopher Booker, The Telegraph, 7 Feb 2015

New data shows that the “vanishing” of polar ice is not the result of runaway global warming. When future generations look back on the global-warming scare of the past 30 years, nothing will shock them more than the extent to which the official temperature records – on which the entire panic ultimately rested – were systematically “adjusted” to show the Earth as having warmed much more than the actual data justified.

Two weeks ago, under the headline “How we are being tricked by flawed data on global warming”, I wrote about Paul Homewood, who, on his Notalotofpeopleknowthat blog, had checked the published temperature graphs for three weather stations in Paraguay against the temperatures that had originally been recorded. In each instance, the actual trend of 60 years of data had been dramatically reversed, so that a cooling trend was changed to one that showed a marked warming.

This was only the latest of many examples of a practice long recognised by expert observers around the world – one that raises an ever larger question mark over the entire official surface-temperature record.

Following my last article, Homewood checked a swathe of other South American weather stations around the original three.

In each case he found the same suspicious one-way “adjustments”. First these were made by the US government’s Global Historical Climate Network (GHCN). They were then amplified by two of the main official surface records, the Goddard Institute for Space Studies (Giss) and the National Climate Data Center (NCDC), which use the warming trends to estimate temperatures across the vast regions of the Earth where no measurements are taken. Yet these are the very records on which scientists and politicians rely for their belief in “global warming”.

Rise in sea levels is 'faster than we thought' 14 Jan 2015

Homewood has now turned his attention to the weather stations across much of the Arctic, between Canada (51 degrees W) and the heart of Siberia (87 degrees E). Again, in nearly every case, the same one-way adjustments have been made, to show warming up to 1 degree C or more higher than was indicated by the data that was actually recorded. This has surprised no one more than Traust Jonsson, who was long in charge of climate research for the Iceland met office (and with whom Homewood has been in touch). Jonsson was amazed to see how the new version completely “disappears” Iceland’s “sea ice years” around 1970, when a period of extreme cooling almost devastated his country’s economy.

One of the first examples of these “adjustments” was exposed in 2007 by the statistician Steve McIntyre, when he discovered a paper published in 1987 by James Hansen, the scientist (later turned fanatical climate activist) who for many years ran Giss. Hansen’s original graph showed temperatures in the Arctic as having been much higher around 1940 than at any time since. But as Homewood reveals in his blog post, “Temperature adjustments transform Arctic history”, Giss has turned this upside down. Arctic temperatures from that time have been lowered so much that that they are now dwarfed by those of the past 20 years. Homewood’s interest in the Arctic is partly because the “vanishing” of its polar ice (and the polar bears) has become such a poster-child for those trying to persuade us that we are threatened by runaway warming. But he chose that particular stretch of the Arctic because it is where ice is affected by warmer water brought in by cyclical shifts in a major Atlantic current – this last peaked at just the time 75 years ago when Arctic ice retreated even further than it has done recently. The ice-melt is not caused by rising global temperatures at all.

Of much more serious significance, however, is the way this wholesale manipulation of the official temperature record – for reasons GHCN and Giss have never plausibly explained – has become the real elephant in the room of the greatest and most costly scare the world has known. This really does begin to look like one of the greatest scientific scandals of all time. (Emphasis added...ed)

THE POPE AND THE ‘CAMP OF THE SAINTS’ by James Reed

Now wait a minute those out there in ‘social credit’ land, excited about the relationship between social credit and Catholicism! Despite good thoughts in the distant past, and hard work done by a few now, we should seriously consider the Catholic power structure as it exists now. The Third World pope, Pope Francis has addressed the European parliament. While telling them that Europe has a right to assert its own cultural identity, as it is ‘no longer fertile’ it must act to “ensure the acceptance of immigrants”. Of course, the claims are mutually inconsistent because the floods of immigrants act to undermine European cultural identity, but, according to the ‘no hope’ Pope, they must all be embraced anyway. The members of the European parliament interpreted the Pope’s words as a need to have even more immigration.

The remarks well illustrate a problem embedded in 21st century Christianity: that of universalism, not intrinsic to Christianity, but there and capable of being manipulated by ethnocentric groups for their own interests. The message of Christianity should be about spiritual salvation, soul-saving, not some feel-good Marxist politically correct worship of immigration, the religion of global capitalism.

If Catholicism wants to play it that way I suggest that Catholics concerned about their race and communities leave the church and form home-groups for worship as many good folk already do. The hierarchy may ‘get the message’ if people vote with their feet.

I am sure Joanne Nova did not realise just how well her article “Study shows, skeptics know more about climate science than believers”, 14 February, 2015, demonstrated the strategy used by the mainstream media and political parties for their very own purposes. It is a strategy they use time and time again to ‘divide and rule’.

Joanne writes: “So much for the theory that skeptics are dumb or uninformed. Fox News reports that a new study shows that when people are quizzed about climate science, the skeptics outscored the believers. Dan Kahan at Yale did the study on 2,000 people, but with only nine questions, so there is limited insight here, but it fits with his previous study which found people who knew more about maths and science were more likely to be skeptical. Readers of skeptical blogs (who chose to respond to surveys and list their qualifications in comments) are likely to have hard science degrees. The world is slowly waking up to the fact that the skeptics are more knowledgeable about science.

In a proper science quiz, the gap would probably be even larger. On two of the nine questions, skeptics got the science right. But believers “outscored” skeptics at repeating the propaganda (which shouldn’t be a question in a survey about scientific knowledge). I’d like to see all nine questions (can anyone find a preprint or the paper?)

Skeptics get science right:

One question, for instance, asked if scientists believe that warming would “increase the risk of skin cancer.” Skeptics were more likely than believers to know that is false.

Skeptics were also more likely to correctly say that if the North Pole icecap melted, global sea levels would not rise. One can test this with a glass of water and an ice cube – the water level will not change after the ice melts. Antarctic ice melting, however, would increase sea levels because much of it rests on land.

Believers (including believers who design surveys) get propaganda right, but science wrong:

Liberals were more likely to correctly answer questions like: “What gas do most scientists believe causes temperatures to rise?” The correct answer is carbon dioxide....”

There he says that Australia would not be the globalist, multicultural society we are today if the White Australia Policy had not been dismantled (no consideration of the “Yellow China” or “Yellow Japan” policies). As well, if Australia had not undertaken non-Anglo immigration in the post World War II era by Arthur Calwell, that dismantling would not have been easy.

Beyond all these well known multicultural/immigration platitudes, while the Immigration Chief of course embraces the idea of Australia being a settler immigration state forever, he advocates Australia being a “gateway to the world and the world’s gateway to Australia.”

Although the Australian state may still defend borders against “terrorists”, “the overwhelming and predominate role of the department will be to act as the open conduits of Australia’s engagement with the world around us, whether for the purposes of trade, travel, or migration – for time limited

The Left/Right Conflict is a Divide-and-Rule Strategy

The battle of words between the two groups is a very good example of what Geoffrey Dobbs wrote of in “What is Social Credit”: The Left/Right conflict is a divide-and-rule strategy, and it is remarkable how closely it has succeeded in spitting the population down the middle... The two sides are at one on their evil policy, they differ only on the truth, which they divide between them and so render impotent...”

He asks: Why not consider Trinitarian Terms?

Writing on Science and Religion: “...When we bear in mind that science in the modern sense could never have left the ground until men had learnt to think of space, time and matter in trinitarian terms, it seems odd that so many theologians shy away from any suggestion that the divine revelation to men embodied in the Incarnation and the Holy Trinity may well have practical applications throughout the whole of human life, including politics, economics and natural science.

Why must it always be restricted to a special, ‘holy’, churchy-emotional, or even an abstract, ‘philosophical’, way of looking at it? Might there not, for instance, be some religious justification for seeking the stability of a three-in-one political constitution, provided the powers remain in balance; or might it not be at least contemplated that possibly a trinitarian resolution of the wave/quantum duality might have advantages over a simple unitary one; and what of the relentless drive for a unified Field theory, and for that matter for a Unified World, and for unification of the churches, with the suggestion that the diversity of nations and peoples, of churches and (by implication) of individual beings generally is a blasphemy against the Unitarian God?...

It would be well if the many theologians, nowadays, who want to adapt their religion to the progress of science, should take note that science does not proceed by the convergence of views or of theories, though it depends greatly on the interplay of and insights and techniques. Actual progress is achieved by leaps of inspiration by individuals, which then have to prove themselves in practice, by experiment and observation of the real world, against the consensus of established opinion...”

purposes or for tomorrow’s settlers.” Who told him to do this?

This hints at a “post Australia” position, with generally open borders and a night watchman state acting only to defend against terrorist threats. Pezzullo’s mention of our indigenous heritage, our British heritage and the multicultural heritage as lasting in our “hearts and minds” indicates that with open borders, even they will go.

Perhaps passive, dopey, de-racinated Aussies, long infected by the virus of pathological altruism will live to see the next big thing the globalist elites have in store for us: dismantling even the Australian national state and making Australia into a global commons.

It can’t happen you say? We can’t lose our Queen (or King), our Constitution, our common law heritage and the rest? In 1930, what would the average Australian had thought if they had read or better yet, saw Michael Pezzullo deliver his speech?

Ask yourself” What next?

LETTER IN THE CANADIAN PRESS

Re: Member of Parliament Leon Benoit's support of the Federal Government's "anti-terrorism" legislation: The Sherwood Park News, Feb. 13, 2015

I agree that this article presenting M. P. Benoit's support of the Federal Government's "anti-terrorist" legislation is either vacuous or provides a platform for a biased view.

If we want to discuss terrorism, perhaps a comparative body count might be prepared showing the number of deaths and massive destruction caused by governments in making cannon-fodder of their populations through incitement of almost continuous warfare to the primary advantage of none other than the great world-conquering banking institutions and powerful corporate interests which historically have found it doubly rewarding to finance and supply both sides of conflict.

This is done in context of a fatally flawed financial system, which generates an increasing chasm between the financial costs and prices of production, and the ability of consumers to liquidate said costs-

-other than by incurring debts as an ever lengthening mortgage or debt claim against future production cycles, and by engaging in paroxysms of increasingly wasteful and destructive activity, i.e., war, in a futile attempt to "compensate" for the inherent growing deficiency of consumer purchasing-power.

The present Canadian Federal Government has been overwhelmingly complicit in a carefully preplanned program of destabilization and destruction of a succession of mid-eastern nations and in approving without reservation unthinkable mass atrocities in that region.

Who are the real "terrorists"?

Perhaps people such as Mr. Benoit might consider a more analytical and ethical approach to the world situation rather than engaging in an all too prevalent self-righteous, intellectually unquestioning, and morally questionable smug establishment self-justification. If they were the direct recipients of some of the dreadful crimes being inflicted upon masses of innocent people, they might understand more about the psychological motivations of resistant victims who can react only in desperation.

If the present Federal Administration is capable of challenging world unrest only by dismantling the whole structure of Constitutional Government and Common Law protections against the Divine Right of Kings and the Star Chamber for which so many have struggled and sacrificed for centuries, then that Government stands condemned.

Mr. Benoit makes one small error:

Governments are not ordained by God and have proven to be anything but angelic. They are corrupted by unrestrained power. Any naïve failure to admit this incontestable fact is a sure prescription for the institution of tyranny.

THE PETRODOLLAR AND THE COLLAPSE OF AMERICA By Richard Miller

Let's see if I have got the basics on this right. On the one hand we have the "new oil shock," caused on the face of it by Saudi Arabian's decision to maintain production, even with a deterioration of the supply-demand curves. Why do this? Theories – perhaps to threaten the US production of oil from non-conventional sources, perhaps it is a joint Saudi/US conspiracy to knock down Iran, Russia and other oil producers that the US doesn't like.

Whatever the cause, in Australia "boom jobs" in the oil and gas industry will be heavily hit. In the next two years tens of thousands of jobs in this sector will go, ironically depicted in the media as our "boom, boom, booming" life-saving industries which justified a massive immigration invasion that still continues.

Not to be outdone, Russia is moving on a "de-dollarisation" plan, challenging outright the use of US dollars for buying and selling oil and gas. If Russia makes good its threat to trade oil and gas in currencies other than the US dollars, the use of the Russian rouble would have a significant impact upon the American economy as Russia is the largest exporter of natural gas and the second largest exporter of oil in the world. China and Iran may support Russia in this. This could create a domino effect if other nations follow.

If the petrodollars collapse, the US will no longer be able to have the value of the US dollar kept artificially high because of demand. Without this, prices of goods would dramatically rise in America. As well the demand for US dollars has kept down the interest rates on US debt and this has enabled the US government to borrow trillions of dollars to keep its multiracial rainbow nation afloat. The Joint Economic Committee of Congress has been told by the Federal Reserve Chairman that current policies will lead to the federal government's deficits rising to "unsustainable levels."

It was estimated that the Federal government will run $7.618 trillion in deficits from 2015 to 2024, and the public debt held by the Federal government would rise from $11.983 trillion in 2013 to $20.947 trillion by the end of 2014. The collapse of petrodollars will cause that debt to explode, burying America. Unfortunately, when they go, we go.

AND YOU STILL DON'T BELIEVE THE PLAN IS TO GET RID OF THE WHITE NATIONS?

From On Target, Vol. 34, No. 9, September 1968 - The Critical State of the World: A Survey by Eric D. Butler

After a six months lecturing and fact-finding tour which covered New Zealand, the U.S.A., Canada, Britain, Rhodesia and South Africa, with the collection of vital information from other countries en route, I returned to Melbourne on August 31 convinced that the state of the world was much more critical than most people realize. It was while I was in Rhodesia that the Soviet tanks rumbled into Czechoslovakia. But as I had to tell expectant Rhodesians, it was clear that those who control policy in the West were determined not to permit this affair from interfering with the programme of expanding trade with the Communist empire. Subsequent statements by financiers and Western politicians have confirmed my view. Economic sanctions against Rhodesia, yes. But no economic sanctions against the Soviet Union...

The Mandela Madness -

-On Target Vol. 26 No.6, 23 February 1990.

<http://alor.org/Volume26/Vol26No6.htm#1a>

The Mandela myth has been created primarily by the international mass media. Mandela was not sent to prison because he opposed "apartheid", but because he was involved in a planned revolutionary campaign to overthrow the Government of South Africa. He and his fellow Marxist revolutionaries received a fair trial in an open court. If he had been involved in such a campaign in any of the Marxist nations he has admired he would have been shot. Mandela admits that he was well treated in prison and was not subjected to any physical abuse. Mandela has told a BBC interviewer that the African National Congress must continue its armed struggle while the "violence" of apartheid continued and that government installations were legitimate targets for bombing attacks...

In Brief: Revealing his appalling ignorance, or worse, of South African history, Malcolm Fraser is supporting Mandela, claiming that the African National Congress only resorted to violence after what allegedly happened at Sharpeville with the shooting of "non-violent" black demonstrators. Just prior to the Sharpeville affair the same type of "nonviolent" Africans, whipped to hysteria by their leaders, over-ran and brutally massacred the police at another centre. Even while Mandela was talking about "peace", Africans were murdering one another. "Majority rule" in South Africa would be a bloody affair.... (emphasis added...ed)

As far as we know, not one representative of the media interviewing Nelson Mandela and his wife Winnie in their Soweto home, asked the smiling lady about her endorsement of the barbaric "necklacing" carried out by ANC supporters against fellow blacks. Perhaps such a question would be regarded as bad taste at a time when the Mandelas are attempting to project an image of sweetness and light. At a time when even it is being openly admitted in the Soviet Union and the Eastern European nations that Socialist economic policies have been a disaster, Nelson Mandela is advocating a Marxist economic programme for South Africa.

- Want to know where your food is from? Join our campaign calling for better Country of Origin labelling. Right now companies don't have to accurately label the origin of our food. They can get away with vague statements like "Made in Australia using local and imported ingredients". This isn't good enough. Join us in calling for the Minister for Agriculture Barnaby Joyce to take action:
