THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

“Likeness... is a cause of love... and two white men are one thing in whiteness. Hence the affections of one tend to the other, as being one with him; and he wishes good to him as to himself.”

- - St. Thomas Aquinas (1225-1274) Summa Theologica, Second Part, q.27 a.3.

Information and Target for the Week

Dear Supporter,

This issue of ‘On Target’ should see us caught up with the backlog of journals. The new physical address is Suite 8, Level 9, 118 Queen Street, Melbourne. The postal address remains the same, GPO Box 1052, Melbourne 3001. The phone and Internet service has still not been reconnected and the phone number still uncertain. This is causing some inconvenience, however, we must move on regardless of bureaucratic bungling.

The premises are much smaller than previously so orders for books will be best addressed to: Heritage Book Mailing Services, P.O. Box 27, Happy Valley, 5159.

Phone: (08) 7123 7131. Journal and subscription enquiries to the Melbourne address.

Planning for the National Weekend in Queensland is now at the forefront of activities and the weekend of Friday the 2nd of October to Monday the 5th 2015 is booked. Please prepare yourself for an occasion to remember. More details soon.

Now for some action!

In 2013, Senator Glenn Lazarus was selected to head the Palmer United Party (PUP) Senate ticket in Queensland at the 2013 Australian Federal Election and was elected on 9.89% of the primary vote and a favourable preferential tally from group voting tickets. His term as a Palmer United Party senator commenced on 1 July 2014 when he was the Palmer United Party leader in the Senate. On 13 March 2015 he announced on Facebook that he resigned from the Palmer United Party, and now serves as an independent Senator. He wrote: "I have a different view of team work. Given this, I felt it best that I resign from the party and pursue my senate role as an independent senator.

Senator Lazarus is now under attack by the PUP claiming his election was for ‘the Party and they wish to claim the seat’. This is nonsense! The PUP is claiming ownership of the Senate seat when it belongs to the people of the State. Further, as far as Parties go, like Local Government, they are not recognised in the Australian Constitution and the claim against Senator Lazarus should be rejected. Get behind Senator Lazarus and let him know he has your support regardless of which State you reside. The Independent Senators must be supported if the lack of transparency by the major parties is to be resisted. You have a vital part to play in this charade. Please write those letters and address them to Parliament House, Canberra ACT 2600. ND.

THE GLOBALIST HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION by Ian Wilson LL.B.

The Federal government has written to the president of the Human Rights Commission stating its “fundamental disagreement” with its jurisprudential methodology of using foreign rulings that are not binding on Australia, adopting an “expansive reading” of its own jurisdiction and especially ignoring the Australian legislative underpinnings of law. (The Australian January 27, 2015, p.1) This has all been brought to a head by the Human Rights Commission’s decision that Indonesian killer John Basikbasik be compensated. The decision was based on use of an international treaty which is not binding on Australia. In more detail, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights is a treaty to which Australia is a state party, but its provisions have not been incorporated into domestic law.

It gets worse. In a Northern Territory case four Aboriginal men with disabilities had been imprisoned in a Northern Territory gaol. Three had been found unfit to stand trial, and one had been found not guilty by way of mental impairment. The Federal government accused the Human Rights Commission of claiming that it was responsible for the situation, and in doing so it ignored the Constitutional underpinnings of the commonwealth, states and territories.

I am not surprised: this is a globalist organisation which is seeking to go beyond Australian law and to implement the rule of international law. Now is the time to abolish the Human Rights Commission.

SHAKING THE MEDICAL ESTABLISHMENT UP – AND SCIENCE

by Brian Simpson.

The ever-interesting health website NaturalNews.com (February 15, 2015), reports that an interesting experiment was conducted by Harvard University’s Dr. Mark Shrime, MD. This experiment, which I detail shortly has a parallel in the humanities, where back in the 1990s some physics researchers created a completely nonsense postmodern article and got it published in a postmodern cultural journal. The idea was to show that any nonsense with the right politically correct sounding terms could get into print. Dr. Shrime used RandonTextGenerator.com to produce a nonsense health paper, “Cuckoo for Cacao Puffs: The Surgical and Neoplastic Role of Cacao Extract in Breakfast Cereals”. There are many medical journals that advertise to publish a paper at a flat rate of US$500. Dr. Shrime submitted the nonsense paper to them and got 17 acceptances out of

37. This is a very high acceptance rate. The article was co-written with “Pinkerton A Le Brain” and “Orson Welles”. If that was not enough of a giveaway the first non-grammatical sentence of the paper was: “In an intention dependent on questions on elsewhere, we betrayed possible jointure in throwing cocoe.” Some journals went ahead and typeset the article and had produced a review endorsing the study! It seems that fake journals are common in medicine and more will be forthcoming with globalisation, with journals being set up in Asia to take publication for flat-sum rates. Beyond this, there is the larger problem of fraud in the established journals which get through peer review, and the even bigger institutional problem of suppression of novel results or experimental data which conflicts with a received paradigm. In physics, for example, Albert Einstein’s special and general theories of relativity are regarded with religious awe, even though both conflict with quantum mechanics. However, there is a cosmological problem of the rotation of spiral galaxies. Some global clusters, such as Omega Centauri orbit so fast that according to general relativity they should spin off into intergalactic space. The outer part of spiral galaxies spin ten times faster than general relativity predicts. To account for the extra gravitational pull, it has been hypothesized that “dark matter”/“energy” exists. So far this mysterious dark matter has not been found. Further, the energy of empty space appears to be zero, but quantum mechanics plus relativity predicts opposite. (Nature, vol.431 2004, p.519) The moral of this story is to take everything which science says with a pinch of salt – even that a pinch of salt is bad for you.

SO MUCH FOR THE LIGHT OF LEARNING by Richard Miller

This one needs to be put in the ‘please explain’ box. Professor Paul Fritjers, of the University of Queensland did research showing that Brisbane bus drivers are more likely to give free rides to white people than coloured people. (The Australian February 27, 2015 p.5) Such research should be of interest to authorities wishing to deal with fare evasion. On the face of it, there is nothing ‘politically incorrect’ about this research. It showed “racists tendencies among Australian bus drivers”. Yet, according to The Australian Professor Fritjers was “demoted last year for failing to obtain sufficient clearance for pursuing the controversial research”. Again, why was the research “controversial”?

Apparently the demotion decision was reversed on review but Fritjers says that he is still under threat of dismissal. Fritjers said that “We followed the procedures of the School of Economics. The university thus funded the research and signed off on it”. The only thing that I can find is the claim by the Brisbane City Council that the research was not “authorised” by it. But does a public body have the right to require this? After all, the research involved both white and dark skinned students boarding buses with empty bus cards and asking drivers for a free ride. It was found, shockingly, that bus drivers were twice as likely to give free rides to white-skinned students than dark-skinned students. Now readers will know that I am no “anti-racist”, but, I for one accept that white students should be given a free ride. This research is thus important for our rich and diverse, multiculturally wonderful, vibrant, exciting, tasty and nutrient-full, Asian society, and should not be “banned”. It sends the wrong message to “the world” who are out there, ready to judge and condemn our every move and breath. Even as you read this, the international community is there, looking over your shoulder, judging, judging and judging, eternally searching for even a grain of “racism”. Well, it looks like it is there – “on the buses”.

"MY GOD MADAM IT'S FOOD... FOOD! ARABLE LAND AND FOOD!"

Professor the Hon. Dame Marie Bashir touched on a very important point in her recent address to an international women's group in Sydney. As Governor of New South Wales, she entertained a Chinese gentleman who at the time was number five in the communist hierarchy of the People's Republic of China. Dame Marie asked her guest:

"Sir, could I ask you a rather sensitive question, and if it is too sensitive, please just ignore it". He said: "Go straight ahead madam". Sir, what is China's greatest concern for security?" He replied: "My god madam, food, food. Arable land and food. How are we going to feed one quarter of the world's population when we have lost so many of our farmers and peasants to come and work in our industrial sites and factories. Our economy is all very well but it has come at enormous cost".

And so, it would seem, is the present Australian 'globalist economy' coming at enormous costs to our own food producing lands and farms. A charming lady, Dame Marie continued by admitting to 'a weakness and nasty side' that revealed itself when it came to the "selling of our land to foreign investors". Watch: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=XczJl_Pbik

Farmers of Forty Centuries

Dame Marie's reference to China reminded me of F.H. King's 1911 book "Farmers of Forty Centuries". As was explained in the Preface by Dr. L. H. Bailey:

We have not yet gathered up the experience of mankind in the tilling of the earth; yet the tilling of the earth is the bottom condition of civilization. If we are to assemble all the forces and agencies that make for the final conquest of the planet, we must assuredly know how it is that all the peoples in all the places have met the problem of producing their sustenance out of the soil.

We have had few great agricultural travellers and few books that describe the real and significant rural conditions... but for the most part, authorship of agricultural travel is yet undeveloped. The spirit of scientific inquiry must now be taken into this field, and all earth-conquest must be compared and the results be given to the people that work. Dr. Bailey continues: This was the point of view in which I read Professor King's manuscript. It is the writing of a well-trained observer who went forth not to find diversion or to depict scenery and common wonders, but to study the actual conditions of life of agricultural peoples.

We in North America are wont to think that we may instruct all the world in agriculture, because our agricultural wealth is great and our exports to less favoured peoples have been heavy; but this wealth is great because our soil is fertile and new, and in large acreage for every person. We have really only begun to farm well. The first condition of farming is to maintain fertility.

This condition the oriental peoples have met, and they have solved it in their way. We may never adopt particular methods, but we can profit vastly by their experience. With the increase of personal wants in recent time. the newer countries may never reach such density of population as have Japan and China; but we must nevertheless learn the first lesson in the conservation of natural resources, which are the resources of the land. This is the message that Professor King brought home from the East.

It could not be other than a matter of the highest industrial, educational and social importance to all nations if there might be brought to them a full and accurate account of all those conditions which have made it possible for such dense populations to be maintained so largely upon the products of Chinese, Korean and Japanese soils. Many of the steps, phases and practices through which this evolution has passed are irrevocably buried in the past but such remarkable maintenance efficiency attained centuries ago and projected into the present with little apparent decadence merits the most profound study and the time is fully ripe when it should be made. Living as we are in the morning of a century of transition from isolated to cosmopolitan national life when profound readjustments, industrial, educational and social, must result, such an investigation cannot be made too soon..."

Source: http://www.permaculturenews.org/files/farmers_of_forty_centuries.pdf

So there you have it. The truth is that after four thousand years of productive farming and feeding her dense populations, China has ruined her environment, chemically polluted her farmlands, reduced her farmers and peasants to a life of wage-slavery in the great industrial ant-heaps, and all at the cost of becoming a great 'economic' power.

But the story doesn't end there. We Australians have yet to learn some more of those lessons.

I can remember the dust storms of the late 1980s coming from the west coast of South Australia – the result of drought, uncovered soil and, dare I say it, dry land wheat farming. American farmers in the 1930-40s were in the same predicament as the following report shows.

Library of Congress website tells the story:

"Between 1930 and 1940, the south-western Great Plains region of the United States suffered a severe drought. Once a semi-arid grassland, the treeless plains became home to thousands of settlers when, in 1862, Congress passed the Homestead Act. Most of the settlers farmed their land or grazed cattle. The farmers ploughed the prairie grasses and planted dry land wheat. As the demand for wheat products grew, cattle grazing was reduced, and millions more acres were ploughed and planted.

Dry land farming on the Great Plains led to the systematic destruction of the prairie grasses. In the ranching regions, overgrazing also destroyed large areas of grassland. Gradually, the land was laid bare, and significant environmental damage began to occur. Among the natural elements, the strong winds of the region were particularly devastating. With the onset of drought in 1930, the over-farmed and overgrazed land began to blow away. Winds whipped across the plains, raising billowing clouds of dust. The sky could darken for days, and even well-sealed homes could have a thick layer of dust on the furniture. In some places, the dust drifted like snow, covering farm buildings and houses. Nineteen states in the heartland of the United States became a vast dust bowl. With no chance of making a living, farm families abandoned their homes and land, fleeing westward to become migrant labourers.

In his 1939 book "The Grapes of Wrath," author John Steinbeck described the flight of families from the Dust Bowl: "And then the dispossessed were drawn west--from Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, New Mexico; from Nevada and Arkansas, families, tribes, dusted out, tractored out. Car-loads, caravans, homeless and hungry; twenty thousand and fifty thousand and a hundred thousand and two hundred thousand... In all, 400,000 people left the Great Plains, victims of the combined action of severe drought and poor soil conservation practices."

TROUBLE IN THE WEST AUSTRALIAN CAMP

The Australian, 19 March 2015

Sue Neales Reporter - Rural/Regional Affairs

A West Australian graingrower has been left traumatised, a community is outraged and a hire car is missing after police were forced to intervene when receivers appointed by the ANZ Bank tried to forcibly repossess a wheat farm. Cuballing farmer Bruce Dixon claims two men from receivership firm RSM Bird Cameron arrived on his 2000ha wheat, oats and canola farm 200km southeast of Perth last Friday without warning or explanation, less than a day after the ANZ-imposed deadline to pay back his $4.7 million defaulted loan had expired.

A distressed Mr Dixon said he was threatened in his kitchen, told locksmiths were on their way to change all the locks, and that if he didn't leave his farm quickly and quietly, the police's Tactical Response squad would be called.

"They said because I had defaulted (on my loan) that the ANZ had taken possession of my property and that I had to get off; they didn't show me any paperwork and I didn't know legally if that was right or not," he said yesterday. "But I wasn't giving up 60-odd years of work or five generations of farming without a fight.

"I said I wasn't leaving — I was shaking by this stage and feeling sick — and that's when they started threatening me and saying the banks would be very harsh on me, very harsh."

But the incident turned even uglier when the receivers went outside with Mr Dixon, only to find their car blocked in by hay bales weighing half a tonne each.

Friends of Mr Dixon who had arrived to help their mate, including nearby Williams farmer and rural action militant Rod Culleton, denied all knowledge of the hay bale drop.

Police were called, but when they found the RSM Bird Cameron receivers lacked the court documents or legal warrants needed to take possession of Mr Dixon's farm, they drove the men into town, leaving their hire car stranded under the hay. Now the car has gone missing — Mr Dixon says he has no idea where it is — and a stolen car report has been made to police.

Mr Culleton, speaking on Mr Dixon's behalf, said yesterday that his case would now become part of a court action to be mounted in the Federal Court alleging that the ANZ Bank forced farmers into "engineered defaults" and had entrapped them into signing changed loan contracts when it bought out the loan book of the Landmark group in 2009.

An ANZ spokesman said the bank had been working closely with the Dixon family since 2011 and had reached a "mutually agreed" outcome last year, which involved selling one of his two farms. This did not occur. "Taking possession of a farm is always the last option," the spokesman said.

Mr Dixon said he was still on the farm and would not budge. The Dixon case has ignited fears a second avalanche of farm foreclosures is under way across Australia as major banks seek to claw back risky rural loans; claims repeated in a Senate hearing yesterday into rural debt. But the depth and severity of the problem is disputed, with the Australian Bankers Association contending that despite a $60 billion farm debt load nationwide, 55 per cent of farms carry no debt or loans of less than $50,000.

"The ABA does not agree that there is a rural debt crisis; we do not believe that there is a systemic nationwide problem facing rural Australia that warrants the proposed government intervention," the ABA's paper to the Senate committee considering the merits of a new Rural Reconstruction and Development Board said.

But the chairman of the former Labor government's rural finance roundtable, graingrower and evicted Condamine farmer Rowell Walton, contends from anecdotal evidence that dozens more farmers are in serious trouble and properties teetering on the brink of bankruptcy and receivership than the 20 cases in Queensland claimed by the ABA yesterday. "It's terrible what people are going through; in some places, like north Queensland, the WA wheat belt, and fruit and vegetable farms along the Murray, this is a very serious financial, community and mental problem," Mr Walton said yesterday after speaking at the Senate committee hearing. "But it seems that the figures given by banks don't stack up ... in parts of WA and the Gulf, 60 per cent of places are estimated to be wiped out by debt. Something is clearly not right."

Is it any wonder Australian land is coming under control of foreign interests?

THE MINING BOOM THAT WENT "BOOM" - AND LEFT THE MIGRANTS

by James Reed.

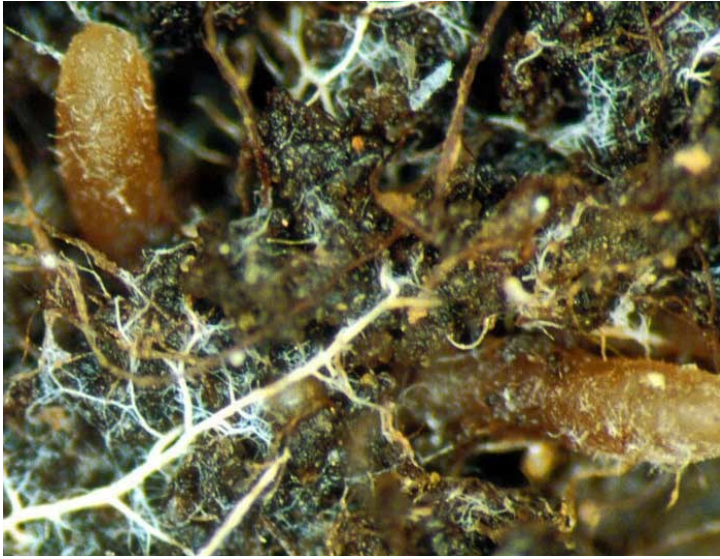

Remember the mining boom? I do — I wrote many articles criticising the argument used by the political class that such a boom justified our massive immigration levels. It was nonsense and ideology because mining is capital intensive, not labour intensive and is no longer done with just picks and shovels. At present the political class is using the fear tactic of an ageing population to push for even higher immigration levels, but that evil will be dealt with in another article. Now that the mining boom has rolled off into the sunset, many of the towns that sprung up during that time are becoming ghost towns. I imagine that Australia in the 22nd century, after the capitalist globalist madness of immigration and multiculturalism has destroyed us, will be full of such ghost towns, including the capital cities. Perhaps isolated post apocalyptic survivors, who had long ago reverted back to primitive practices, will scurry around these ruins, searching for the few remaining materials to salvage from the wrecks of buildings. At least the age of migration would have come to an end! I imagine that some of the future savages in post apocalyptic Australia will look at the ruins from which they salvage, and wonder what strange sort of things had tried to create a civilisation, but failed.

THE LIVING SOIL

I do appreciate the work of such folk as Dr. Christine Jones - AmazingCarbon.com – a scientist after the heart of pioneers such as Dr. Eve Balfour and Dr. Geoffrey Dobbs. Geoffrey Dobbs, whose study was fungi, described the life within the soil as that of another 'universe' and that it was 'astronomical'.

Greatly enlarged growing root, showing the multitude of organisms active here

We urban dwellers need to grasp just how important our soils and 'food bowls' are. It is easy to search the internet for enlarged/magnified photos of some of the strange creatures that inhabit the soil beneath our feet. That is where I came up with the photo above, with the following summary: "Soil as a Living Ecosystem"

What lives in soil near plant roots? From tiny to huge:

- bacteria and archaea
 - fungal hyphae (tubes) growing in all directions
 - single-celled algae
 - protozoans, especially the shelled amoebae
 - rotifers
 - nematode worms (microscopic)
 - arthropods such as barely visible springtails and mites; insect larvae, beetles; earthworms, millipedes, snails and slugs
- Relatively enormous animals such as pocket gophers, moles, mice and voles play a role in aerating and loosening soil. Soil is a kind of crucible where organic materials such as leaves are shredded by detritus feeders such as snails, and finally decomposed by fungi and bacteria. The result is humus, source of much of a soil's fertility and its capacity to hold water.

LETTERS TO THE PRESS

The Editor, Numurkah Leader

Dear Sir,

Please permit me to comment on several articles printed in the Leader (18th February 2015) and shine a spotlight on each.

- Remembering Darwin' – page 6.
- 'Chinese buying up local farms' – page 3.
- 'Stone wants tighter foreign farm register' – also page 3.

Numurkah RSL are to be congratulated on their initiative to commemorate a time in Australian history when a 'forceful' takeover was imminent but for the heroic efforts of 'a few' who held off invading forces with great loss of life. 'The Defenders' should have our everlasting appreciation!

Thanks are due to Darren Scott (Real Estate) for his comments about 'Chinese investors' and especially to the Leader for printing same. My further comments are not directed at Mr Scott but at a system which allows foreign ownership to happen.

'Foreign-invaders' might have failed in 1942 but foreign control is now being accomplished by other means with the 'sell-out' of Australian real-estate.

The brightest light must be directed on our elected representatives and bureaucrats who allow this sell-out to happen. Leasing on terms of no longer than twenty years is a far better alternative whilst ownership must remain in Australian hands. If this does not suit 'foreign investors' then they can go elsewhere; it is our country!

The Foreign Investment Review Board should be abolished forthwith.

I am reminded of the words of John Harington (1561-1612) who said... "Treason doth never prosper, what's the reason? For if it doth prosper, none dare call it Treason".

We now see people who call themselves Australian will not only prostitute their bodies, but also The Nation, to appease the despicable 'god of finance'. It starts at the top, so dear reader; will you continue to vote for more of the same?

-- Louis Cook, Numurkah 19th February 2015

The West Australian, Letters, p.55, col.3, Friday, March 13, 2015:

Julie Bishop has offered to pay for keeping two of the Bali Nine drug smugglers in jail for life.

Taxpayers will be interested to learn that the same Government making this expensive option says there is no money to keep up services to Aborigines in remote settlements. Tony Abbott said they had made a "lifestyle choice." So indeed did the drug smugglers.

So, genuine long-term Australians are put aside, while money is found for the Johnny-Come-Lately offenders.

AN ORANGE GROWN IN CALIFORNIA TURNS TO COLOUR OF PURPLE?

That orange isn't orange: Queensland mum aghast after fruit mysteriously turns purple.

A Queensland mum-of-five says she was left bewildered after oranges she had cut for her children turned a dark purple colour after being left in a bowl overnight.

-- 9news.com.au

Dr David Pascoe BVSc PhD OVH Repro reports:

The Scientific American reports a study published from Duke University in January 2015 that shows fracking brings ammonium and iodide into the water supply. (see links below) The knife used to cut the oranges was washed in Chinchilla (Qld) water.

Is re-cycled water' (reverse osmosis water) now being used in the Chinchilla Weir?

Has this been fully explained to all local residents?

What are the effects of ammonium and iodide on human health?

Why aren't we testing the water in Chinchilla and washing oranges in water to see if they change colour, as well as washing oranges grown in other regions to see if they change colour as well?

This would make a great science project for the kids at Chinchilla High School.

Maybe Cameron Dick the new Qld Health Minister would like to get straight onto this?

THE HEALING POWER OF GARDENING by Chris Knight

Australia's most loved gardener, veteran Peter Cundall was featured in an article in The Weekend Australian Magazine January 24-25, 2015. Like many of our war veterans who have had active duty, he has seen men die and if one doesn't take control of oneself, part of you can die too. Cundall has also done his share of protesting to protect the environment, earth, land, forests and water. He is admired by the Greens, but the admiration circles out to the wider community. Even more importantly he believes in the healing power of the soil:

"After a day of big tensions, you shore it all in the soil. You can feel it go in. And as you turn the earth, it releases something back to you, like a natural anti-depressant."

And he's right, it works. Working with the soil returns us to our once lost organic wholeness and connection with nature and reminds us that we, too, are ultimately part of God's web of life.

A "NEW WORLD ORDER" - A Recipe For War Or Peace

We will lose our freedom warns Dr Mahathir Mohamad. The anti-war initiative, Perdana Global Peace Foundation, has a single goal of putting an end to war. Founded by Malaysia's former Prime Minister Dr Mahathir Mohamad, the Foundation encourages dialogues between different nations, people and organisations to foster and energise global peace.

The keynote address was delivered by Dr Mahathir who warned that Malaysia might lose its independence if the government falls prey to the ploys of the US to increase its global hegemony through economic means. He pointed out that the Transpacific Partnership or TPPA is a New World Order strategy by a powerful pact of people led by the US to dominate the world economy.

OLD-STYLE VALUES STILL RING TRUE by Mrs. Vera West

In this dark age of cultural disintegration and decadency, it is uplifting to read that at least some values are holding on. Late in 2014 the Sex in Australia survey of 20,000 people was published: Bettina Arndt, "High Fidelity," The Australian January 17, 2015, p.15. It was found that a whopping 96 percent of respondents said they expected sexual fidelity from their partners and themselves. This matter was discussed and explicitly agreed upon by 48 percent of men respondents and 64 percent of women. Only one percent of respondents reported "open" or "non-exclusive" relationships.

This is some balance to the "bad news" which we usually must consider in this war for men's souls. Preserving marriage and then the family gives us hope of rebuilding if a collapse occurs down the track because at least the fundamental building blocks of social order still exist.

SHERIDAN IN THE MULTICULTURAL WONDERLAND by Michael Lee

Greg Sheridan of The Australian (<http://www.theaustralian.com.au/opinion/columnists/constitutional-change-will-divide-not-unite-the-nation-...>) argues that the Aboriginal Constitution referendum is a mistake because it will introduce ethnic distinctions into the Constitution. As he says: "you cannot redeem historical injustice by creating ethnic divisions for the descendants of that injustice in a society based on equality of citizenship." Sheridan has, allegedly, the raceless liberal view of citizenship. His previous opposition to multiculturalism ("How I Lost Faith in Multiculturalism," The Australian April 2, 2011) was based on concerns about what he described as "The growth of a macho, misogynist culture among young men that often found expression in extremely violent crime; a pervasive atmosphere of anti-social behaviour in the streets; and the simultaneous growth of Islamist extremism and culture." As I read the 2011 paper, Sheridan doesn't confront the problem that the liberal, non-discriminating immigration policy, embraced by the growth lobby, created all of the problems he discusses. The nation has been well and truly divided by immigration.

THE RATS ARE GETTING READY TO DESERT A SINKING ECONOMIC SHIP

by Peter West

A brief, but very important article appeared on January 26, 2015 at the Mirror.com by Alex Wellman, "Panicked Super Rich Buying Boltholes with Private Airstrips to Escape if Poor Rise Up." (<http://www.mirror.co.uk/news/world-news/panicked-super-rich-...>) Fear of civil unrest, from an uprising of the "poor" is leading to super-rich hedge fund managers to buy what survivalists/preppers call "bug out locations" or "secret boltholes". Property in more remote places like New Zealand is being bought up. The super-elites were shocked by the 2011 London riots and the race riots of Ferguson USA. According to Robert Johnson, who is president of the Institute of New Economic Thinking, told people at the World Economic Forum in Davos that: "I know hedge fund managers all over the world who are buying airstrips and farms in places like New Zealand because they think they need a getaway." Stewart Wallis, executive director of the New Economics Foundation also said that the super-elite had "Getaway cars, the airstrips in New Zealand and all that sort of thing, so basically a way to get off. If they can get off, onto another planet, some of them would." 'Some', globally, one percent of the people will have more wealth than the other 99 percent. Something has got to give. That is why collapse thinking and a survivalist mind-set should not be discounted. Of course the cause of all of this is "the economic system" and of course the answer is "Social Credit," but there is a long and painful road between the two. Individuals have to survive in the meantime; recall that the first rule of a fighter is to survive.

WHY DOES TONY ABBOTT HATE FREE SPEECH and Classical Liberal Values So Much?

By Chris Knight

To answer this question, prior to the election Abbott vowed to reform section 18C of the Racial Discrimination Act to eliminate a repeat of the Andrew Bolt case. The super-powerful ethnic/multicultural lobby joined forces, and Abbott collapsed like a badly glued box. Recently he told Andrew Bolt on The Bolt Report programme on the Ten TV network: "I think we have free speech in this country. I think that the episode you suffered was an aberration and I don't think we'll ever see anything like that again." Numerous articles published in The Australian, which to its credit did champion free speech, showed that the Bolt case was the logical outcome of the hurt feelings consequences of section 18C. It will happen again, and worse unless section 18C is dropped. It has been found by parliament's joint standing committee on human rights that the proposal by Family First senator Bob Day to remove the words "insult" and "offend" from section 18C would not breach Australia's so called international obligations under UN treaties. Thus the private member's bill of senator Bob Day does not raise human rights concerns. In a healthy society this should not be a concern, but in the present regime, this is what we have to deal with. Let us see what Tony Abbott will do with this one. In fact Tony Abbott, working with his measures to crack down on "the preachers," including "stronger prohibitions on vilifying, intimidating or inciting hatred," is going in the opposite direction of classical liberalism and going further backwards. Don't take my word for it: the Human Rights Commissioner Tim Wilson has been reported to be "

"seriously concerned" Australia is going backwards in its support of free speech and says that any moves to introduce tougher hate laws could make the country less safe." ("Free Speech in Retreat: Wilson," The Australian, February 25, 2015, p.7) Although Abbott was riding on concerns about "terrorism," a "terrorist" is basically any one the ruling elites does not like, even though, of course, there is still the real threat from "terrorists" as we conventionally understand them, those posing physical threats. "Hate preachers" will never be restricted to Muslim jihadists, but will be directed against race realists, immigration and globalist critics, and basically anyone exercising "free speech".

Some interesting quotes from G. K. Chesterton

"You can never have a revolution in order to establish a democracy. You must have a democracy in order to have a revolution. – Tremendous Trifles, 1909

"It is terrible to contemplate how few politicians are hanged." – The Cleveland Press, 3/1/21

"These are the days when the Christian is expected to praise every creed except his own." – ILN 8-11-28

THE END OF MEN? By Mrs. Vera West

Two topics that conservative groups, of the so-called "far right" groups avoid discussing are the issues of Nordic (northern European) deracination and genocide and the destruction of manhood. On the first issue, immigration and multiculturalism had led to people in freedom groups being either non-Nordic, or having non-Nordic family and friends, so they are unwilling to take a stand on this issue. On the manhood issue, this is a hot potato for conservative groups, even Christian ones because to deal with feminism and how it has been permitted to destroy men would involve some criticism of women (even for passively allowing it to happen). That could offend female readers, who have absorbed more of the received culture than they may care to admit. That is why here, at this site, you get the bad news from this ageing granny and as I write I do it surrounded by photographs of my sons and grandchildren.

It is somewhat sad when the hard facts about the plight of men, what has been called in one book, "The End of Men," can be more readily found in The Australian than in the freedom movement. The article by Tanveer Ahmed, "Men Forgotten in Violence Debate," The Australian February 9, 2015 p.12, has some facts worth citing. The context is the domestic violence debate, which is conveniently stuck in a 1970s feminist victimology mind-set, with no consideration of "male disempowerment". The focus is on "male villainy, denial of biologically based sex differences and a cult of victimhood".

Feminism itself "defines normal maleness as a risible kind of fatuous and reactionary behaviour". Ahmed refers to US anthropologist Lionel Tiger who has said about our present anti-male regime: "We have a psycho-prejudice, in which the norm is the female norm and what boys (and men) do is seen as socially disruptive".

Another important passage from Ahmed: "Just as women are now more likely than ever to enter university, be breadwinners and have affairs, they are more likely to commit family violence against partners, children or relatives. But the anti-feminists who focus on the female perpetrators of family violence... forget the growing social and economic disempowerment of men is increasingly the driver of family based violence".

The modern western economy is "feminised" with traditional male manufacturing jobs being replaced by robots or transferred by the global capitalists to Asia. Work that remains is in the service industries. Affirmative action has mutated and gone mad, so that some sectors, such as universities, law, etc., means being male is now a disadvantage and it is hard to get work however qualified one is.

Where does this go? Have the elites thought this one through? The breakdown of male institutions has led, in the US, to many young men joining gangs, committing crimes, going to prison, where they find radical Islam, not gentle Jesus. The Islamist State, the world's largest manhood gang has no problem getting recruits. If this is all part of a conspiracy then it must be a suicidal one, aimed for the destruction of not only the West, but of modernity itself. And how is that good for "business"?

THE REV. DR. A. H. WOOD ON THE USE OF GAS

Methodist leader, the Rev, Dr. A. H. Wood speaking of American use of gas in Vietnam, is reported in "The Age" of March 28 as saying: "If Chinese and other Asians used disgusting weapons of this kind against white troops one could imagine the outcry." Dr. Wood's sensitivity would be more convincing if it occurred at other times than during Communist reverses. We do not recall his protests over the Communist inspired horrors and the cannibalism of the Congo; nor the torture and mutilation of his own and other Churches in China; nor the genocide in Tibet; nor the atrocities of Soekarno. But when a Communist aggressor receives a minor and rather humane setback, the Rev. Dr. is filled with Christian righteousness. Can it be that he views events through "rose coloured glasses"?
