Thought For The Week

To imagine that the abstraction we call the State is qualified to render decisions on theoretical, abstract historical, economic or philosophical-religious issues which have challenged saints and seers for time immemorial is utterly preposterous and would be purely laughable if such powers did not bring injustice and suffering to innocent citizens. What sane person would willingly deliver his or her fate to the judgements or edicts of the ignorant functionaries in government who obviously have very limited academic or often even ethical qualifications in such areas? Human “Rights” Commissions are simply politically-motivated Bolshevik-style “Peoples’ Tribunals.” They constitute a travesty of Justice and are designed as a revolutionary instrument to be just that. Enlightened and disinterested (i.e., unbiased and responsible) business people should understand such elementary issues as a basic requirement of citizenship in an enlightened society. Unfortunately consequent to limited and degraded education, they frequently do not properly understand them. We have made great strides in the physical sciences but lag woefully behind in the social. Wally Klinck. Canada. Correspondence 25/04/2015.

Today much is being made of events surrounding the ‘First World War’ ... the heroism, mateship and sacrifice of the ‘expendable men in the trenches’ and even after 70 years, the Truth behind the scenes is still being assembled for examination to understand the ‘causes of war’. However, it is now possible to see with great clarity, how world events unfolded. Generally it was an attack on ‘Western Christian Culture’. It paved the way for setting up the atheistic and murderous Bolshevik regime which became the apparent centre of ‘world revolution. At the same time the socialisation of the West proceeded until the ‘assisted’ collapse of the Berlin Wall. We now see the formation of the ‘One World State’ gathering momentum and ably assisted by our ‘democratically elected politicians. Is this what YOU voted for? On page 3 of this issue is an article referring to Eric Butler’s work ‘A Synthesis Of The Communist Textbook On Psychopolitics’ which is essential reading to even begin to understand the ‘Communist mind’ or, as it is generally termed, brain-washing - it is necessary to stress the fact that failure to understand that the Communist conspiracy is primarily concerned with a struggle for the minds and souls of men, means that the individual is left defenseless against his enemies.

The Coming Vaccination Tyranny: Sleepers, Awake! By Mrs. Vera West

The Abbott government has just announced that parents who do not vaccinate their children will lose welfare payments. The idea, which will "save" $50 Million a year, is to scrap the "conscientious objection" provision which presently allows anti-vaccination parents to get child care assistance and Family Tax Benefit A, so that objecting families could lose up to $2,100 per child. This means that parents having a religious, philosophical or medical objection to vaccination will be forced to comply or lose benefits. It seems that this measure arose from rising whooping cough deaths and disease outbreaks in "small communities" where unvaccinated children live. Presumably these "small communities" include outback -Aboriginal communities.

Thus, rather than engage in a voluntary vaccination program in the affected areas, the government will introduce measures that overrule the freedoms of people objecting to vaccinations. There are reasons for such an objection. For example, on philosophical grounds alone one may actually prefer to get childhood diseases to strengthen the immune system, as used to be done. One may not trust what goes into vaccines, even if conventional immunization theory is accepted.

The claim that unvaccinated children are a "threat" to vaccinate children is fallacious. The vaccinated children, according to orthodoxy are already protected, so why worry about them? Their health and liberty is not threatened. If the parents choose to not vaccinate their children, that is their right.

Tony Abbott posted this 29 minutes ago, about the time I started my article, on April 12, 2015 on his Facebook page "No Jab,

No Play. No Jab, No Pay". Like that tough talk "jab, jab, and jab". It continued: "from 1 January 2016, childcare and family payments will be denied to parents who don't vaccinate their children". The flavor of this is but one further illustration of Abbott's abandonment of the classical liberal tradition of freedom and liberty.

Back in The Social Crediter January 1939 C.H. Douglas spoke of "moral re- armament". The forces of the elites seek to divide and rule. As illustrated by consulting the comments on Abbott's Facebook page, many of the supporters of his proposed policy falsely (I believe) believe that the safety of their children is at risk. There is a need to unite and not to be ruled, Douglas said. This is a principle that needs to be recognized in the battle ahead.

Liberty and the Freedom to Discriminate by Chris Knight

I enjoy reading the cheery articles of American libertarians, not on economics (where they are deluded about the "free" market), but on ethics. Bob Livingston, "The Freedom to Discriminate is Essential to Liberty" (April 13, 2015, at <http://personalliberty.com/the-freedom-to-discriminate-is-essential-to-liberty/>) is a good example. We discriminate everyday, in making choices about where one lives, work and what one does - even what one eats. A free state should be one where one makes one's own choices about what one does rather than having one's choices mandated by the state. We don't live in one, obviously enough.

Shouldn't a right of association extend to who one services in a business? Livingstone says that if one is denied service by a business, then, so what? Why not go to another business where you are valued as a customer? "On one business denying service to a potential customer, whether because the business owner cannot fulfill the order due to workload, because the business owner doesn't like the colour of the customers hair or skin, because the person is a known adulterer, because the person is a homosexual, or because the business owner is simply in a contrary mood harms no one but the business owner. The customer denied the service is free to take his business to any of a number of other businesses nearby".

This is a simple, but powerful argument that undermines most of our politically correct, UN-based so-called anti-discrimination legislation. Liberty is based on the freedom to discriminate.

There Comes a Time... For Challenging the System by Chris Knight

Historian David Sharkey has unloaded on the politically correct Establishment. (Daily Mail, April 11, 2015) among the taboos broken and sacred cows attacked, he commented on the "victim status" of ethnic minorities and disabled people and said that women were of average intelligence whereas men were either "very, very bright or very thick". To add to this assault on the political class, he said that "real talent has left politics" and that there was no current politician equipped to be Prime Minister of Britain.

What is interesting is that Sharkey, now 70 years old, is a homosexual and was born "quite seriously disabled", was strongly critical of the culture of victimology, even for the disabled. This will make it a wee bit more difficult for the new class to shout him down. My prediction is that they will just hope that he will be quiet. However, hopefully, this brave act of defiance will stimulate other Establishment figures to take a stand.

The Threat of the Social Media by Peter Ewer

Before leaving for an 11 hour holiday flight from London to Cape Town, Justine Sacco posted the tweet: "Going to Africa. Hope I don't get AIDS. Just kidding. I'm White". There was an eruption of rage on the ultra-politically correct twitter-sphere with calls for her sacking. A hostile tweeter was waiting at the airport eager to photograph her. The hotel staff threatened to strike if she stayed and death threats were made. Of course she was sacked from her job.

The irony is, apparently, that her joke was directed against "ignorant white people". She said: "Only an insane person would think that white people don't get AIDS. To me it was so insane of a comment for anyone to make". Well, no reflection here about epidemiology and the statistics of disease transmission, or the more controversial claim that Nordics have a gene which gives some protection against HIV, an evolutionary product of European people dealing with the Black Death.

The social media thus has the potential for great harm. But no doubt it can also be used to "get the message out".

In the coming vaccination fight young and old people should use it to put the issue out there. The established media will not be doing this; of that you can bank on.

A SYNTHESIS OF THE COMMUNIST TEXTBOOK ON "PSYCHOPOLITICS"

Eric D Butler

In publishing for the first time in Australia a synthesis of the Communist textbook on psychopolitics - or, as it is generally termed, brain-washing - it is necessary to stress the fact that failure to understand that the Communist conspiracy is primarily concerned with a struggle for the minds and souls of men, means that the individual is left defenseless against his enemies.

Upon reading the Communist's own material on brain-washing, many will be horrified at the implications and ask is it possible for such organized evil to be operating successfully in non-Communist countries. Unfortunately organized evil has taken a very heavy toll without more than a few realizing fully what has been happening.

Eric Butler, 1956.

I could be seen as 'cruel' on Gardasil: Abbott

The Australian Nov 09 2006

Mr. Abbott was today asked if he would have his three daughters vaccinated with the breakthrough drug, which has been controversially left off the Pharmaceutical Benefits Scheme (PBS).

"I won't be rushing out to get my daughters vaccinated, maybe that's because I'm a cruel, callow, callous, heartless bastard but, look, I won't be," Mr. Abbott told Southern Cross Broadcasting today.

"If there is a national immunization program, I certainly will be making sure that they get vaccinated (with Gardasil) under the program.

"The program is what the experts think clearly is absolutely necessary, and at the moment the experts don't think this is absolutely necessary."

Hundreds of Children Brain Damaged by the Swine Flu Vaccine to Receive $90 Million in Financial Compensation from UK Government

International Business Times – 23 April 2015.

Brain-Damaged UK Victims of Swine Flu Vaccine to Get £60 Million Compensation by Tom Porter, March 2, 2014

Bottles of Pandemrix, used as a vaccination against swine flu, now banned for those under 20

Patients who suffered brain damage as a result of taking a swine flu vaccine are to receive multi-million-pound payouts from the UK government.

The government is expected to receive a bill of approximately £60 million, with each of the 60 victims expected to receive about £1 million each.

Peter Todd, a lawyer who represented many of the claimants, told the Sunday Times: "There has never been a case like this before. The victims of this vaccine have an incurable and lifelong condition and will require extensive medication." Following the swine flu outbreak of 2009, about 60 million people, most of them children, received the vaccine.

It was subsequently revealed that the vaccine, Pandemrix, can cause narcolepsy and cataplexy in about one in 16,000 people and many more are expected to come forward with the symptoms. Across Europe, more than 800 children are so far known to have been made ill by the vaccine.

Narcolepsy affects a person's sleeping cycle, leaving them unable to sleep for more than 90 minutes at a time, and causing them to fall unconscious during the day. The condition damages mental function and memory, and can lead to hallucinations and mental illness.

Cataplexy causes a person to lose consciousness when they are experiencing heightened emotion, including when they are laughing.

The Pandemrix vaccine was manufactured by pharmaceuticals giant Glaxo Smith Kline, which refused to supply governments unless it was indemnified against any claim for damage caused. The company will pay the bill, and claim the money back from the government.

"There's no doubt in my mind whatsoever that Pandemrix increased the occurrence of narcolepsy onset in children in some countries - and probably in most countries," Emmanuelle Mignot, a specialist in sleep disorder at Stanford University in the United States told Reuters.

Mignot has been paid by GSK to research the effects of the drug.

Among those affected are NHS medical staff, many of whom are now unable to do their jobs because of the symptoms brought on by the vaccine. They will be suing the government for millions in lost earnings.

However, the vast majority of patients affected - around 80% - are children.

Among them is Josh Hadfield, 8, from Somerset, who is on anti-narcolepsy drugs costing £15,000 a year to help him stay awake during the school day.

"If you make him laugh, he collapses. His memory is shot. There is no cure. He says he wishes he hadn't been born. I feel incredibly guilty about letting him have the vaccine," said his mother Caroline Hadfield, 43.

Despite a 2011 warning from the European Medicines Agency against using the vaccine on those under 20 and a study indicating a 13-fold heightened risk of narcolepsy in vaccinated children, GSK has refused to acknowledge a link.

"Further research is needed to confirm what role the vaccine may have played in the development of narcolepsy in those affected," the company said in a statement.

The Pioneering Work of FREDERICK ROBERT KLENNER, M.D.

“From 1943 through 1947, “Dr. Klenner reported successful treatment of 41 more cases of viral pneumonia using massive doses of vitamin C. From these cases he learned what dosage and route of administration - intravenously, intramuscularly, or orally - was best for each patient. Dr. Klenner gave these details in a February 1948 paper published in the Journal of Southern Medicine and Surgery entitled ‘Virus Pneumonia and Its Treatment with Vitamin C.’”

Another Greensboro Daily News article written by Miller recounts how Klenner first used injections of vitamin C:

“Dr. Klenner remembers using (ascorbate) for a man, who was lying near death from severe virus pneumonia, but refused to be hospitalized. “I went to his house and gave him one big shot with five grams or 5,000 milligrams of vitamin C,” he recalled. “When I went back later in the day, his temperature was down three degrees and he was sitting on the edge of the bed eating. I gave him another shot of C, 5,000 milligrams and kept up that dosage for three days, four times a day. And he was well. I said then, well, my gosh! This is doing something.”

Klenner devised an early office test for vitamin C. He would go on to administer massive amounts of ascorbate against any and all viral diseases. And, in the course of some forty years of general practice, Klenner used vitamin C, often accompanied with high doses of other nutrients, to fight a striking variety of other illnesses. Smith itemizes a list that includes Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever, bladder infections, alcoholism, arthritis, leukemia, atherosclerosis, ruptured intervertebral discs, high cholesterol, corneal ulcer, diabetes, glaucoma, burns and secondary infections, heat stroke, radiation burns, heavy metal poisoning, chronic fatigue, and complications resulting from surgery. Additionally, Klenner also reported mega nutrient cures of tetanus, trichinosis, venomous bites from spiders or snakes, and, perhaps most controversially, multiple sclerosis.

VITAMINS AGAINST MULTIPLE SCLEROSIS

Nearly every person with multiple sclerosis that I’ve met has had two things in common: a lack of hope, and a lack of vitamins. Klenner’s patients lacked neither, with a treatment schedule calling for massive quantities of B-vitamins to, said Klenner, “effect nerve repair.” He based his protocol in part on work, in the late 1930’s, by “Stern from Columbia University, (who) was employing thiamin hydrochloride intraspinaly with astonishing results in multiple sclerosis. He reported taking patients to the operating room on a stretcher, and following 30 mg thiamin given intraspinaly, they would walk back to their room.” While, Klenner commented, “the response was relatively transient,” it indicated that multiple sclerosis might be a severe form of avitaminosis.

If one vitamin helped, two seemed likely to work better. Klenner writes: “Moore, in 1940, published a monograph on the use of high intravenous doses of nicotinic acid for the cure of multiple sclerosis. Moore employed a drug combination called ‘Nicobee.’ This preparation contained 100 mg nicotinic acid and 60 mg of thiamin in each 10cc solution.” Moore, like Klenner, was influenced by earlier work showing that nerve degeneration results from multiple nutritional deficiencies. Subsequently, Klenner would employ what may only be described as a wide-ranging nutritional approach. His protocol for multiple sclerosis and myasthenia gravis follows, as described in his paper, “Response of Peripheral and Central Nerve Pathology to Mega-Doses of the Vitamin B-Complex and Other Metabolites”

Anomie and Depersonalization in the Modern Economy by James Reed

A little article with no listed author entitled “Depersonalization”, Home, May 1986, caught my attention. It made the point that collectivism is not just the preoccupation of left wing groups, but is also prevalent in the Right as well and present as a defining part of finance-capitalism. The financial institutions and corporations have become holistic entities in themselves, something more than the individuals who make them up, taking on a life of their own. They are social wholes or collectivistic entities as real as any in political socialism.

Beyond even this, it is the condition of equality, beloved of the present politically correct regime which makes our present centralized system totalitarian. As the little article rightly notes:

"Equality is, of course, the sole and essential quality of units, but not of people. The tragedy is that most people now demand to be so treated, and have been taught to confuse equality with justice". People are thus depersonalized into units, ready for central processing and manipulation.

What is to be done?

The article wisely concludes by saying that we need to exercise individual responsibility and refuse to be manipulated: stand up for your rights and fight. We need to re-embrace the Christian concept of the free and responsible individual and reject outright the fundamental basis of the collectivist regime.

The Myth of Global Warming and the Joy of Fossil Fuels by James Reed

Matt Ridley is the author of The Rational Optimist and a member of the British House of Lords. In his article the "Fossil Fuels our Here to Stay", The Australian, March 23, 2013, p 11, he socks it to the global warming and peak oil crowd. A big colour photograph shows some allegedly melting Arctic sea ice. But even if this is happening, no doubt a product of natural variation, Antarctic ice is increasing, so how could global warming be occurring? As well Ridley tells us that the shale oil revolution will give the world oodles of hydrocarbons for centuries. Then there it is all that methane hydrate that can also be burnt, probably giving us energy for what - a trillion years or so?

I find the Ridley article thus of great comfort because our lifestyle can continue basically forever because climate change is a myth as shown by the "pause" which is really a refutation of their models, I believe.

Now that the Melbourne cold is starting to come I will be burning everything I can this year to keep warm, maximizing my consumption of hydrocarbons. At my age, burning fossil fuels is one of the few enjoyable things left in life. Plus, having beefed up on the literature debunking climate change (which probably hasn't occurred anyway in the 6,000 years since the creation) and that smashing peak oil and any sort of resource limitations, I happily no longer recycle anything - except old ideas and arguments. Are you listening, tree huggers?

The Threat of Genetic Engineering by James Reed

If you are like me, not scientifically minded, but still deeply concerned about technology, out of control, Stephen M. Druker, Altered Genes, Twisted Truth (Clear River Press, 2015) will bring you up to speed on genetic engineering. As the subtitle puts it: "How the Venture to Genetically Engineer Our Food has Subverted Science, Corrupted Government, and Systematically Deceived the Public". This large book is written by a US public interest lawyer who had great success in one lawsuit that opened up the US Food and Drug Administration files on genetically engineered/modified foods.

The book gives us an extended argument over hundreds of pages as to why we should be alarmed about GM foods. We see in the US how Big Agri and the federal authorities work together to fast track GM foods to the American table without an adequate investigation of safety issues. (p.271) Indeed the US government committed fraud allowing some GM foods to get onto the market. (p.270) The temptation of money encouraged scientists, especially molecular biologists, who portray themselves as being at the peak of scientific objectivity, to become advocates, and spin doctors. Druker shows in detail that the molecular biology establishment played a key role in advancing agricultural biotechnology, systematically deluding the government and the public on the facts about the safety of genetic engineering.

The most interesting chapter in this 511 page book relates to why we should be concerned about scientists "playing God". He quotes from a paper by Richard Strohmman, "The Coming Kuhnian Revolution in Biology", Nature Biotechnology, March 1997 which rejects the idea of the "gene" as the central directing agent of the cell. Genes are basically protein producing mechanisms, but control of the cell comes from holistic "rules and constraints that organize genetic agents into functional arrays". (p.322) The level of organization is not the DNA, but is "coextensive with the cell itself", the so-called epigenetic factors. These rules are not yet known, and thus there is the great likelihood, Druker notes, that playing with that which we don't understand could lead to a bio-disaster.

Altered Genes, Twisted Truth is an important book which should make us all take a critical look at science and technology. Too often we are told to "believe" because these great demi-gods have proclaimed some alleged scientific truth. But often this is all just politics, motivated by money. Druker's work is excellent at making readers more skeptical and more critical about simply accepting things because some expert has said it is so.

Altered Genes, Twisted Truth

How the Venture to Genetically Engineer Our Food Has Subverted Science, Corrupted Government, and Systematically Deceived the Public. By Steven M. Druker

Approx $30.00 posted from UK

Meticulously documented, well-crafted, and spellbinding narrative should serve as a clarion call to all of us. In particular, his chapter detailing the deadly epidemic of 1989-90 that was linked with a genetically engineered food supplement is especially significant. I and my Mayo Clinic colleagues were active participants in the attempt to identify the cause of this epidemic. Druker provides a comprehensive analysis of all the evidence and also presents new findings from our work.

Vicious attack on Dr. Oz actually waged by biotech mafia; plot to destroy Oz launched after episode on glyphosate toxicity went viral Friday, April 17, 2015 ~ By Mike Adams, the Health Ranger (NaturalNews) Dr. Oz should be given a Congressional medal of some kind for his willingness to expose the truth about glyphosate on national television. In a recent episode that went viral, Dr. Oz discussed the toxicity of the biotech industry's favourite pesticide "glyphosate" - a dangerous chemical that even the World Health Organization now admits likely causes cancer.

In response to this episode, the so-called "Monsanto Mafia" went berserk with all their usual character assassination tactics, and now they've come up with a contrived plot - a campaign of intimidation and character smearing - to try to silence Dr. Oz by destroying his credibility. A letter signed by ten doctors - all of whom have financial ties to industry - calls for Columbia University to force Dr. Oz to resign from the university's Department of Surgery. This letter is a tremendously educational exhibit of the mafia tactics used by the biotech industry, as it essentially claims Dr. Oz has lost his mind and is now endangering the public. "Whatever the nature of his pathology, members of the public are being misled and endangered, which makes Dr. Oz's presence on the faculty of a prestigious medical institution unacceptable," the letter reads.

Of course, all the people who signed this letter have no qualms whatsoever with farmers spraying thousands of tons of cancer-causing glyphosate herbicide chemicals on all the foods we eat. That's perfectly acceptable to them and poses "no danger," they claim. It is Dr. Oz and his crazy, wild, irresponsible advice that people should eat wholesome foods and take charge of their own health that's now deemed a threat in this society... a society dominated by the financial interests of biotech and pharmaceutical corporations that profit from sickness and disease. The real sickness, however, is found in the fact that these "Monsanto Mafia" operatives are given any credibility at all by the media. It doesn't take much poking around into their backgrounds to find out they're actually a gang of industry-funded junk science egomaniacs and hucksters.

Not in MY Name

David B Smith 2014

There is a great evil under the sun,
An evil that beggars belief.
Right now, today in this age of plenty,
The shepherds have turned from their flock.

They'll save us from our sin for sure
And ensure our eternal salvation.
But never mind the here and now,
Get by as best you can.

Never mind the cruel whips that mammon
flays,
Never mind the heartache and pain.
Twill all be over bye and bye,
And we'll meet in heaven again!

Not in My name sweatshop and slavery,
"Why work ye for that which is not bread"

We live in an age where machine does most work,
Thanks to the brain God has given.
As total production rises still more,
Have we no brain to distribute the stuff around.

Not in My name poverty and pain,
"For life more abundant came I."

Here in this 21st century,
The age of computers and automation,
Who buys the loaf of bread,
If no wages were issued to bake it?

But still the evil power says (And echoed by our shepherds)
By the sweat of your brow shall you live
today,
Work is the justification for life,
There's no place for grace in finance.

Not in My name the Christ calls still,
"Are ye not more than they"?"
We've seen it all before you see,
Our memories dead it seems.

"The song of the shirt",¹
"Faces on the street"²
The fruit of mammon's service.

"No such thing as a free lunch",
Deny's us the gifts of God.
The power and control of the rule of men.
Is the legacy of grace denied.

A war is waging around the world,
Which nation can sell their produce.
The cheapest labour wins the war.
With their people poverty stricken.

For this our leaders have fallen,
Free trade they call it today.
Our factories now are silent,
Even our food comes from over the seas.

Not in My name money and gain,
"Thou shalt have no gods before Me"
Isaiah's words echo down the years,
"Our watchman shepherds are blind"
"Dumb dogs that will not bark "said he
Small wonder the flock are indifferent.

Before we point the finger too much,
Consider our stand for Truth.
And forgive us Lord thereto,
Loose our silent tongue's at last,
Truth bravely to proclaim.

Not in My name child abuse and lies,
"Woe to you who wash the outside but inside are full of corruption".

And so the shepherds bid us well,
And wave as we march to the usurer's beat.
To fight their wars and kill and maim,
To consolidate the bankers power

To be sure they'll be there to pray o'er your grave,
And praise the battle you fought.
But ne'er question the banker's power,
Who provided the bullets for you and the foe.

Not in My name, kill or be killed.
"Which father if his son should ask for bread,
will give him a snake instead."?"

And all the while God's grace still pours,
Abundance for every need.
But no, by the sweat of your brow shall
you live,
God's grace only extends to your sins.

The field exists to serve the lilies,
Whom God hath deigned to clothe,
Will He not so care for you,
Oh ye of little faith?

Not in My name famine and shame
"A corrupt tree brings forth evil fruit".
"By their fruits you shall know them".

Just when did the shepherds lose the plot,
When Christ's teaching rings loud and clear,
Feed my sheep our Lord did say,
I have provided your every need.

In mercy Lord now judge us,
As from mammon we depart.
Those pastures green we yet shall find,
With or without our shepherds.

Not in MY name a desolate Kingdom.
"Blind guides which Strain at a gnat and swallow a camel".

"Why call me Lord and do not the things I say"?".

Jean Marine Le Pen: On Saving the White World by Richard Miller

The media has made much over the political fallout from Marine Le Pen's criticism of her father 86-year-old Jean Marine Le Pen statements on historical revisionism. Marine said that her father's remarks were "political suicide" and "unprecedented crisis" for the French National Front.

On April 9, 2015 Jean Marine Le Pen's interview with the French Nationalists weekly Rivarol was published. Unlike our media, the French were not shy about discussing the question of the survival of the white race. To the chase: on the question: "What are the chances of France and Europe in resisting decay and (non-White) submersion", Le Pen said:

"The figures are terrifying. On the one hand we have 735 million Europeans with an average age of 45. Fertility rate: 1.4 children per woman. In front of us there are 6 billion individuals, with mean age of 20. Fertility rate 4 to 5 children per woman. The problem is of a geopolitical nature. If you do not cut off the pipeline between these two, if you do not remove the suction pump, if you do not reverse the immigration flood - we are finished, without even needing a revolution or a war. We will be defeated at the ballot box. This is an unavoidable mathematical reality. We will then have a government as depicted by Michael Houellebecq: A Sharia government".

"Here are the other numbers you may want to think about: China has 1.4 billion people, India 1.5 billion. If China drops, as is likely, the iniquitous law of one child per family, it is to be expected that on the demographic level the backlash will result in the large families they were deprived of earlier. Thus we can have a China with 3 or 4 billion people! This seems obvious from the planet Sirius, but we need to look from

Some Real Inconvenient Truths about "Climate Change"

By James Reed

The Jo Nova website has some interesting statistics based on an on-line poll of 2412 Americans. These are some of the results: 57% of people distrust UN scientists; 82% of people distrust climate guru Al Gore; the same number distrusts Prez Obama and a whopping 90% distrust Pope Francis. As we know the most politically correct of Popes has now embraced climate change, but it appears not to have impressed too many people. Overall it appears that people are becoming more skeptical of most things, which is a very good sign in the age of lies, deception and treachery.

Scientists reply to hypocrites: We dare you to talk science instead how you hate "fossil fuels" from <http://joannenova.com.au>

Caught with their pants down.

Unskeptical-scientists, like Hansen, Trenberth, and Mann, have plastered their name on a document aiming to stop scientific research. They want less science funding. Who hates science then?

The Ethical Poseurs

Who cares about the ethics of fossil fuels funding skeptics, but doesn't care when renewable-energy corporations sponsor pro-crisis exhibitions? Siemens was principle sponsor of the UK Science Museum's propaganda gallery on climate science. It makes EUR 80 million profit each quarter from wind and renewables. Where is the outrage? When mercenary corporates use museums to boost their profits, that's OK for Hansen, Trenberth and Mann. The other big sponsor was Shell, which profits from gas sales, when its cheap competitor coal gets hit thanks to "climate-panic". Shell, of course, likes windmills, which need a gas form for back up.

Time skeptics stood up for science funding

We skeptics need to stop buying into the bullying and intimidation of those who say fossil fuels can fund unskeptical research but not skeptical (i.e. real) research. The sole reason they do this is to starve skeptics and to poison the well for audiences. It is anti-science, anti-free-speech, anti-intellectual in every way. Most times when a skeptic says "we take no fossil fuel funding" it caves to that meme. It feeds the monster. It is as if skeptics are confirming that unskeptical activists are right to "expose" and discuss funding without even discussing the research. It is never OK to use an ad hom in place of an argument. The correct response of any scientist accused of receiving any money "linked" to fossil fuels is to say: "We'd be grateful if we were. Please give my details to the Koch Brothers. So you are still too scared to discuss the science? If you can find a problem with my research, we would talk about that instead, wouldn't we?"

It's time scientists talked science instead of "vested interests".

The Unskeptical-scientists don't want to debate this through peer review, they're terrified. Nobbling competing scientists by attacking their funding is their best strategy; their scientific case is riddled with holes.

That's why it is great to see a group of scientists take this head-on, and you can join them.

The Natural History Museum has written an open letter to other museums – telling them to stop taking fossil fuel money (specifically Koch funding) for vapour thin ethical reasons, and because they are nice people who really care a lot about the planet.

CO2Science has an Open Response, where they are collecting names in support. Essentially, they point out that it boils down to a well funded mob complaining that skeptics got about 1% as much money from philanthropic donors as they did. Instead of arguments based on science and facts, the movement labels any who question their dogma as "deniers," funded, according to the letter, by "climate-change-denying organizations spending over $67 million since 1997 to fund groups denying climate change science."

The hypocrisy is breathtaking. Orders of magnitude more funding has been given by governments and foundations to organizations and individuals charged with "scientifically" proving the alleged evils of CO2 and inventing ways to cope with it. In 2011 alone, ten large foundations donated $577 million to environmental causes, nearly ten times more than the total funding since 1997 to the so-called "deniers." And that does not count tens of billions of dollars from the government and other foundations. Apparently the movement's scientific case is so weak that they feel threatened by any research that does not support their doctrine.

We applaud support for informative studies of the climate, for example, ocean monitoring programs, satellite instruments, or meteorological networks with high-quality data archives. This work needs no defense from scientific challenges, regardless of the source of funding. The honest scientists responsible for much of this excellent work cannot be blamed for the excesses of the anti-fossil fuel movement. But the signers of the letter include some of the biggest feeders at the climate trough, who benefit from millions of dollars of funding every year for research empires, which, in many cases, stoke a propaganda mill instead of producing real science. In the interests of transparency and intellectual integrity, the signatories of the "To the Museums" letter should have each revealed their annual and cumulative climate funding.

this perspective at the future of the world. There are 1 million Chinese people in France. These are intelligent people, active, discreet, yet powerful and redoubtable. As we are all too eager to sell our mortal remains and the parts of our crown to the highest bidder - of course, there is a reason to worry! That's why we absolutely need to agree with Russia and save the boreal (North) Europe and the White World. The Northern, boreal Europe also encompasses Slavs, Siberia, although I am afraid that the Russians cannot keep it for themselves".

The comments are interesting because they give a characteristically French perspective on the same issues that writers here are grappling with.

Dismantling Whiteness by Hans Kruger

Cecil Rhodes's statue has been removed from the University of Cape Town, following mass student protests. This is supposedly, in the rainbow state, a symbol of "institutional racism". It is just the start, as other statues of those whites who built South Africa are systematically removed. Meanwhile the ANC allows both blacks and whites to sink ever-deeper into poverty. Attacks on white farmers are a regular occurrence. Rape has become a recreational sport for many here. This is the story of how a society ends; I only hope that the rest of the West can learn from our plight.

LETTERS TO THE PRESS

Injustice

May I reply to Neil Morrisons Frozen Pensions statement (edition March 11). I have no complaints about the pension business, other than to state that it is definitely unfair.

However I think when we leave our country of birth to settle in other lands, we do forfeit to a certain degree, some aspects of privilege that the former country allowed us. I think Australia is a grand country, and I do not need to adopt the almost quisling attitude of Mr.

Morrison to say so. It is because of courageous British sailors of the past, who suffered all kinds of hardships, scurvy, starvation, etc, that allows the modern day Australians to dictate terms of entry 'graciously taking us in', as Mr. Morrison puts it.

There is one extreme act of ungraciousness that I see practiced by Australians, which I find totally abhorrent and disgraceful. It is the covering up of the fact that tens of thousands of the ANZACs were British-born and bred.

These men who fought and died alongside the Australian comrades in the same army, in every battle of the 1914-18 war, has been completely forgotten, and deliberately ignored. The Australians have claimed Gallipoli as their own special battle, where the brave Australian soldier steps up to defend the Empire against a tough enemy, and the total incompetence of the English General Staff.

This is where the WAB, the white Australian born male learned 'Mateship' and a 'Fair Go'. There is neither of these worthy attributes present when they don't acknowledge men of a different nationality in the same army. The British lost over four times the amount of the men killed at Gallipoli that the Australians did, and that is without counting the British killed in the ANZACs. This is to me racial discrimination at its worst, and is further endorsed by the fact that the aborigines had to erect their own war memorial, which was paid for out of the national lottery. The Australians will admit to one or two British members of the ANZACs but nowhere near the scales of tens of thousands, some units were as high as 50% British. I would like to think that you would publish my letter, but better still right this wrongful dishonouring of soldiers by investigating why it has happened. Edward Rowland

To the Editor of THE AUSTRALIAN

You are editorially beating a broken drum ('Recognition needs consensus', 18-19/4) and Warren Mundine is right to suspect that the possibility of a successful referendum is 'going the way of the republic.'

Despite your bland optimism, there is no chance at all that any proposed constitutional change 'will gain similar support' to that of the 1967 referendum. Too much has happened since then; the eyes of the electorate have been opened to the damaging of national unity being caused by the Aboriginal industry and its non-Aboriginal supporters, to say nothing of the waste and corrupt misuse of taxpayers' money. It is not just 'constitutional conservatives' who are opposed to the project, but a wide spectrum of ordinary Australians who rightly smell a rat. And just as Parliament does not in these times adequately and fully represent the will of the people, so the representative credentials of the National Congress of Australia's First Peoples are also suspect.

TO nmitchell@3aw.com.au

Pardon me if I am under some sort of illusion, but I thought we were commemorating the 100th anniversary of the Gallipoli landing. The "We are one, and we are many" doesn't apply here. If you look at the many photos we have been seeing in the days leading up to 25.4.15, you will see that the faces of those who went to Gallipoli were mainly Anglo-Saxon-Celtic people with perhaps the odd sprinkle of Aborigine and Chinese thrown in.

I know that referring to white people these days is politically incorrect and that propaganda came in after 1970 when someone somewhere was given the word to make the dwelling places of the whites into multicultural areas. That was effective, and the whites no longer can call their culture their own. However, let's be fair, at least to history, and get it right. It is, after all only for one day in 100 years.

That song is really insulting to the descendants of the ANZACS who, in their thousands, died for their country in the most appalling conditions.
