Thought for the Week with Proposed Action

It is timely to revisit the ‘On Target’ Archives whilst the Australian Treasury is calling for submissions for a ‘White Paper’ to guide the Government Tax Reform program.

17 May 1974. Thought for the Week: "Progressive taxation, like political unionism, became a tool of communist economic-political warfare because it could be aimed at certain strata of bourgeois democratic society: the managerial groups, whose incentive and energy are so important to production. To the Communists, progressive taxation is not based on a principle but is merely a tactic that might serve a communist purpose. "The long-range aim of communist demands in the major Western nations remains the same, namely to weaken capitalism's base of private enterprise and property by making these institutions insecure. Once the sense of security and stability is gone, there remains a condition of fluidity propitious for the various forms of communist political warfare."

William R. Kinter and Joseph Z. Kornfeder in The New Frontier of War. (1963)

What is the Government’s apparent financial policy affecting all citizens of Australia? It is to see as few people as possible become financially independent. This is because you cannot buy votes from financially secure and independent voters.

The Treasurer opened the conversation on tax by releasing the tax discussion paper on 30 March 2015. The Government is seeking submissions on the issues raised in the discussion paper. You have until 1 June 2015 to lodge your formal submission. You will find more information here...http://bettertax.gov.au/publications/discussion-paper/. Note the use of ‘better tax’ as if it has some redeeming features. The submissions presented to date make interesting reading ... almost all want to shift the tax burden onto someone else or they clamour for increasing the GST and adding it to everything without exclusions... none shall escape! Please make your submissions to the Tax White Paper Task Force or if you have any questions or feedback please contact them at: Tax White Paper Task Force, The Treasury, Langton Crescent, PARKES ACT 2600 or Email: bettertax@treasury.gov.au or Phone: (02) 6263 2304 and ask for anything to help you make your presentation. Make doubly sure you forward a copy of your finished submission to your elected Members of Parliament at every level of government.

... and will be helpful formulating ideas for a submission.

You can be sure any reform will mean increased tax contribution from YOU!

BASIC FUND

No doubt it is a sign of the times but I must report the Basis Fund is struggling along and now reached $15,200. We must also try and expand our number of supporters and to this end, if you know someone who would like to receive 'On Target' by e-mail, which we can supply at minimum cost, then please forward their e-mail address and home details to the Melbourne office. Please be sure to ask the intended recipient FIRST before sending details.

The tragic death of hundreds of refugees last week in the Mediterranean Sea has once again brought to light the deadly hypocrisy of Western leaders and their mainstream press. Omissions and distortions are disconnecting the catastrophic event from its roots, preventing the real culprits from being publicly exposed. Were the victims Libyan migrants seeking a better life in Europe, or rather refugees fleeing a war zone created and fueled by Western powers?

Deadly Disinformation: War, the Mainstream Media and the Tragic Death of African Refugees by Julie Lévesque - Global Research, April 28, 2015

The way the story is told and the wording are deceptive. Danish scholar Jan Oberg explains:

In various media reports and political statements the word refugee is increasingly being replaced by migrant... A migrant, according to the UN, is a person who is engaged in (seeking) a remunerative activity in a state of which he or she is not a national. A refugee is an entirely different person who is outside his or her home country because of having suffered (or feared) persecution on account of race, religion, nationality, or political opinion; because he or she is a member of a persecuted social category of persons; or because they are fleeing a war... Using migrants instead of refugees takes away our attention from why they flee, from our own complicity in all this and it reduces our responsibility to protect refugees....

Because most of these refugees come from zones where Western military interventions and arms exports have failed miserably their officially stated purposes and caused only more problems. Like with so many other problems these years, there is a psycho-political denial of the fact that Western militarism is the single most important cause of the problems we are facing.

The Pentagon's 'Long War' Pits NATO Against China, Russia and Iran By Pepe Escobar

Whatever happens with the nuclear negotiations this summer, and as much as Tehran wants cooperation and not confrontation, Iran is bound to remain - alongside Russia - a key US geostrategic target.

As much as US President Barack Obama tried to dismiss it, the Russian sale of the S-300 missile system to Iran is a monumental game-changer. Even with the added gambit of the Iranian military assuring the made in Iran Bavar 373 may be even more efficient than the S-300.

This explains why Jane's Defense Weekly

was already saying years ago that Israel could not penetrate Iranian airspace even if it managed to get there. And after the S-300s Iran inevitably will be offered the even more sophisticated S-400s, which are to be delivered to China as well.

Africa Needs To Be Rich – Rather Than Green by Matt Ridley, The Times

Cheap, coal-fired energy will help the developing world to become healthier, happier and afford to fight climate change

In what is probably the silliest comment on climate since a Ukip councillor blamed floods on gay marriage, a green journalist opined of the refugees dying in the Mediterranean: “This is what climate crisis looks like . . . We know there is evidence that the violence triggered by the Arab Spring uprisings of 2011 were in part fuelled by protests over soaring food prices.”

The soaring prices were actually exacerbated (as the Food and Agriculture Organisation of the UN confirmed) by the diversion of much of the world’s farmland into making motor fuel, in the form of ethanol and biodiesel, for the rich to salve their green consciences. Climate policies were probably a greater contributor to the Arab Spring than climate change itself.

Many refugees are fleeing Islamist persecution in Libya and the Sahel but as Dr Kandeh Yumkella, UN under-secretary-general, told the BBC, the “long-term push factors” that are driving people to make the “miserable journey” include the lack of energy in sub-Saharan Africa.

Without abundant fuel and power, prosperity is impossible: workers cannot amplify their productivity, doctors cannot preserve vaccines, students cannot learn after dark, goods cannot get to market. Nearly 700 million Africans rely mainly on wood or dung to cook and heat with, and 600 million have no access to electric light. Britain with 60 million people has nearly as much electricity-generating capacity as the whole of sub-Saharan Africa, minus South Africa, with 800 million.

As the International Energy Agency recently put it in a recent report, “increasing access to modern forms of energy is crucial to unlocking faster economic and social development in sub-Saharan Africa”. Africa is awash with fossil fuels - but not the capital to build plants to turn them into electricity.

Just to get sub-Saharan electricity consumption up to the levels of South Africa or Bulgaria would mean adding about 1,000 gigawatts of capacity, the installation of which would cost at least £1 trillion. Yet the greens want Africans to hold back on the cheapest form of power: fossil fuels. In 2013 Ed Davey, the energy secretary, announced that British taxpayers will no longer fund coal-fired power stations in developing countries, and that he would put pressure on development banks to ensure that their funding policies rule out coal. (I declare a commercial interest in coal in Northumberland.)

In the same year the US passed a bill prohibiting the Overseas Private Investment Corporation - a federal agency responsible for underwriting American companies that invest in developing countries - from investing in energy projects that involve fossil fuels.

There is a growing backlash against this policy. The Republicans want to reverse it. Yvo de Boer, head of the Global Green Growth Institute, says: “You really have to be able to offer these countries an economically viable alternative, before you begin to rule out coal.” And Donald Kaberuka, president of the African Development Bank, says it is hypocritical for western governments, made rich by fossil fuels, “to say to African countries, ‘You cannot develop dams, you cannot develop coal, just rely on these very expensive renewables’. African countries will not listen.”

The Center for Global Development calculates that $10 billion invested in renewable energy technology in sub-Saharan Africa could give 20-27 million people access to basic electricity, whereas the same sum spent on gas-fired generation would supply 90 million.

Meanwhile, China’s new Asian Infrastructure Investment Bank is stepping in as the Americans and Europeans step back. Its willingness to fund coal projects is one of the reasons other Asian countries are rushing to join the project, to the irritation of Washington. The Australian government is joining forces with Japan to push for the construction of “clean coal” plants in the developing world - power stations that burn coal more efficiently.

Some greens argue that rural parts of Africa may be able to eschew giant power grids and leapfrog into off-grid solar-powered electricity, a bit like Kenya has with mobile banking. But that costs more and it won’t power factories. The continent needs both, and those who advocate no support for coal are effectively saying that the adoption of renewable energy is more important than alleviating African poverty.

The evidence suggests that investing in affordable energy in Africa will not only achieve great good in itself but will equip Africans better to cope with dangerous climate change if it happens: weather-related mortality correlates with poverty. A survey of more than two million Africans finds that climate change comes dead last of 16 concerns they were asked about.

So far, the African climate has not changed significantly, anyway: dangerous weather is no more frequent and a recent analysis by Euan Mearns found that temperatures in southern Africa, outside cities, are no higher than in the 1930s. (He also found evidence of “shocking, mass manipulation of temperature records”, a charge that is now to be investigated on a global level by a panel chaired by Professor Terence Kealey.)

Meanwhile, satellite images show a spectacular and beneficial greening all across the Sahel, caused partly by better land management and partly by higher carbon dioxide levels in the air, which encourage plant growth. A German study projects that this may continue for most of the current century.

Freedom and Vaccination By Mrs. Vera West

Katie Attwell, "Community Counts the Cost of Non-Vaccination", The Australian, April 17, 2015, p.12, puts the pro-vaccination case that vaccines eradicated smallpox (rather than public health measures and the disease itself waning) and "The scientific evidence of vaccines' efficacy is unequivocal and vaccines are extremely safe, made even more so by improved practices of surveillance and feedback". At this site Richard Miller in "The Vaccine War" has given the case against this. Notable is the British government in 2014 offering compensation of £60 million for children who received the swine flu vaccination. (See <http://www.ibtimes.co.uk/brain-damaged-uk-victims-swine-flu-vaccine-get-60-million-compensation-1438572>) All medications, even aspirin have some risk for some people and it is nonsense to suppose otherwise. Doctors have in their office a "Mims" or on-line, which lists all the likely side-effects from all known drugs.

Attwell says that the vaccination skeptics "have attained wide exposure for a range of spurious arguments against vaccines. These include unsupported links to ill health and disorders and claims about vaccine ingredients that ignore the maxim that the size of the dose determines the poison". So is this an admission that there may be small, but allegedly safe doses of otherwise poisons, such as mercury (as a preservative) in vaccines? The Miller paper gives evidence that Mercury is in vaccines and that there really is "no safe level", especially for poisons that accumulate in the body.

Interestingly Attwell notes that the financial benefits stick will not prevent wealthy parents from still choosing not to vaccinate and "This is a concern to some vaccination researchers, who worry about the social justice consequences of such a policy". Rather than address this issue, which essentially undermines her case (i.e. they're still will be children escaping the vaccination drag-net), she goes on to make the point that there is a message from the Abbot policy that vaccination is a social (I would say "economic") practice with costs for not vaccinating. She even says that there should be a government run no-fault compensation scheme for the "extremely rare cases of vaccine injury". Rare? Like with the swine flu injuries in the UK?

The vaccination issue is a fundamental human rights issue. The risks from vaccines, even accepting the standard line that vaccines do work, is non-zero, as with any medical treatment. People have a natural right to autonomy and individual responsibility, and informed consent. These rights with respect to medical practice are also articles 5 and 6 of the Universal Declaration on Bioethics and Human Rights and long incorporated into medicine. Coercion of parents through the Centrelink stick is a clear violation of these rights and the matter should be pursued via international law.

Sitting on the near horizon is mandatory vaccinations, or coercive/Centrelink-based vaccinations for all people. What will you do when they come with a needle for you?

Freedom, the ICAC and Common Law Rights By Ian Wilson LL.B

Even though many of us are skeptical about the anti-Federalist tendency of the High Court of Australia, on many issues of common law rights, the High Court has delivered right decisions. For example, the NSW corruption watchdog, the ICAC (Independent Commission Against Corruption) was investigating State prosecutor Margaret Cunneen SC over remarks it was alleged she said to her sons girlfriend at a traffic accident. This led to a raid and property seizure. Ms Cunneen was not supported in her bid for justice by any publicly funded human right legal centers or by the media. It was only the High Court which pulled the ICAC's horns in.

And what horns these are, as Chris Merritt, the legal affairs editor for The Australian (April 18-19, 2015, p.18), notes, The rules of evidence, such as hearsay, are relaxed, and there is only a limited ability to cross-examine ICAC witnesses. Originally the ICAC was limited only to matters affecting the probity of public officers, but since 1988 the ICAC has interpreted its powers more widely to extend to all matters that could affect the efficacy of such officials. Hence their interest in the Cunneen case. Fortunately the High Court decided rightly.

The human rights lobby were revealed as the shallow politically correct ideologues that they have been said by many to be, for their failure to defend Ms Cunneen. It was just as well that as a top legal mind she was able to handle the matter herself, and win. We all owe her a debt of gratitude. It was a great victory for common law rights and she deserves praise.

Cold and Hungry Uncle Len Wants to be a "freeloader" Too.

(Just Joking) by Cold and Hungry Len the "Heartless"

When you are homeless and on the bottom of societies wheelie bin, like me, you take note about "finger-lickin Freeloaders". (The Advertiser, April 19, 2015, p.9) Our Adelaide Town Hall bureaucrats spent almost $90,000 on food, alcohol and coffee last year. They visited fine dining restaurants, got nibbles, chocolates and even fast food from KFC and McDonalds. The Sunday Mail got the gourmet details under the Freedom of Information Act.

For you good folk in the eastern states it may be instructive to see what your own local government is gobbling down. I suppose a dinner for a meeting and coffee goes with the land, but I personally can't see how one can justify around $10,000 being spent on bars and booze. Shouldn't these servants of the people have a clear head, as Uncle Len does?

As I shiver myself to sleep tonight, warmed by my old sleeping bag and pages from The Advertiser for warmth, I allow myself to fantasize about being a bureaucrat and also pigging in - but then I correct myself, slap my hand and regain my moral strength. I promise my fans that no matter how hungry I get, I will never sell my soul to the sweetest chocolate. No, it is far better to freeze and/or starve to death.

The Vaccination War By Richard Miller

Mahatma Gandhi (NaturalNews.com, February 28, 2015) was strongly critical of vaccinations saying: "Vaccination is a barbarous practice and one of the most fatal of all the delusions current in our time. Conscientious objectors to vaccinations should stand alone, if need be against the whole world in defence of their convictions". Stirring words that should be widely quoted by the vaccination-freedom movement.

Along with the Abbot proposal to take away family Tax benefits from those who are doing as Gandhi recommended, California's SB277 mandatory vaccination bill has now passed the Senate committee, after votes have been "rigged" and "public testimony silenced". According to Mike Adams over at the Naturalnews.com site (April 22, 2015), there was a public outcry over the mandatory vaccination bill, so the "pro-vaccine mafia machine" rigged voting by replacing seats on the committee with pro-vaccine supporters, and a replacement Democrat senator's vote was enough to strip Californians of their once vaccination-exemption rights. No public testimony was allowed. Adams alleges that most of the "sell-out senators" "received campaign finance donations from vaccine manufacturers".

Swine flu

Children in Australia and America, in acts of medical tyranny will be forced to have vaccines, even though vaccines can be extremely dangerous, and have caused permanent neurological and other damage to children. For example, back in March 2014, the British government was going to fork out £60 million compensation for 60 children who received the swine flu vaccine Pandemrix. This vaccine can cause Narcolepsy and cataplexy in around one in 16,000 people, affecting a child's sleep cycle so that they cannot sleep for longer than 90 minutes at a time and leading to them falling unconscious during the day. Mental function and memory are severely impaired and mental illness and hallucinations can occur. Cataplexy is also common, when given heightened emotion, people lose consciousness. These are incurable, lifelong illness. Over 800 children across Europe have been harmed by the swine flu vaccine.

Read further:

<http://www.ibtimes.co.uk/brain-damaged-uk-victims-swine-flu-vaccine-get-60-million-compensation-1438572>

Vaccine fraud

That is only one story. Also back in 2014, CDC whistleblower William Thompson issued a statement saying the following: "I am a Senior Scientist with the Centres for Disease Control and Prevention, where I have worked since 1998. I regret that my co-authors and I omitted statistically significant information in our 2004 article published in the journal Paediatrics. The omitted data suggested that African American males who received the MMR vaccine before age 36 months were at increased risk for autism. Decisions were made regarding which findings to report after the data was collected, and I believe that the final study protocol was not followed". (See Naturalnews.com, August 27, 2014) Natural News published emails that were instrumental in getting this story out.

Vaccination toxins

These examples are clear counter-examples to the dogma pushed by the vaccination lobby and Big Pharma that vaccines are "safe". There is evidence that more people have been harmed than the medical mafia are prepared to openly admit. Further, as Mike Adams pointed out back in October 24, 2012 (Natural News.com), the US Centres for Disease Control's vaccine additives page states that the following are vaccine additives: aluminum, antibiotics, formaldehyde, monosodium glutamate (MSG) and thimerosal (a methyl mercury compound). Pro-vaccinators say that the quantity of mercury is too low to matter, but there is no safe dose of an accumulative poison such as mercury. Adams quotes from the National Toxicology Programs which admits that vaccinations "may produce small but measurable increases in blood levels of mercury"; "thimerosal was found to cross the blood-brain and placenta barriers"; "hazards of thimerosal include neurotoxicity and nephrotoxicity" (i.e. brain and kidney toxicity); "similar toxicological profiles between ethyl mercury and methyl mercury raise the possibility that neurotoxicity may also occur at low doses of thimerosal"; "there are no existing guidelines for safe exposure to ethyl mercury, the metabolite of thimerosal". It was also stated that "thimerosal is still present as preservative in some vaccines given to young children, as well as certain biological products recommended during pregnancy". Mercury is added as a preservative in multi-dose vaccines. Big Pharma could produce single-dose vaccines without thimerosal and hence mercury but find the production of multi-dose vaccines more profitable.

Is Vaccination a "Conspiracy"?

Mike Adams thinks that the global elites are using vaccines to "dumb the population down so that nobody has the presence of mind to wake up and start thinking for themselves". That may or may not be so. However Adams (Natural News.com, February 28, 2015) is right in saying that we are living under a regime of scientific and medical extremism, a "bone fide scientific dictatorship" where those who reject the delusions of the cult of modern "science" are vilified, verbally assaulted and threatened with arrest and imprisonment by a fanatical class of mentally ill media operatives who claim to represent "science".

Beans, Berries and Dementia by Peter West

Here's something positive worth noting. Researchers publishing in the journal Alzheimer's and Dementia (lead author, Prof Martha Morris) have tested a diet that promises to reduce the risk of developing Alzheimer's disease. Called the MIND diet, the diet is largely plant-based with a focus on green leafy vegetables and berries. The study was not randomised or controlled, so it didn't meet the "gold standard" of statistical proof, but the observations made were suggestive. Basically consuming a vegetable rich diet, with nuts, beans and fruit, especially berries, is the key to weight loss and controlling high blood pressure. It seems to me that many of these modern diseases are products of junk life styles, which tend to gear people towards junk diets. The key is to get quality back into one's life and to remember that we are what we eat.

LEGAL UPDATE BERNARD GAYNOR Apr 15, 2015

As you may know, serial litigant and Anti-Free Speech activist, Gary Burns, is using legal terrorism to shut down this website. He's lodged at least 20 complaints against me with the New South Wales Anti-Discrimination Board. As a result, I now face three possible fines of up to $100,000 (all of which will go to Gary Burns) and could be forced to apologize for my beliefs. If I don't, I could be jailed for contempt.

In just one example, I face fines for condemning homosexual men who exposed themselves to children at the Toronto Gay Pride Parade and for criticizing the leadership of the homosexual community which has supported and protected this behaviour. You can read more about the abusive behaviour of Gary Burns and this entire saga here.

<http://bernardgaynor.com.au/into-battle-backup-required/>

There was a hearing into one matter on 1 April 2014. I also have hearings on 22 April, 27 April and 30 April. There will be more to follow and I expect that this will eventually wind up before the New South Wales Supreme Court.

You can read about that situation here.

<http://bernardgaynor.com.au/press-release-defence-to-terminate-commission-of-christian-officer/>

The hearing for that matter has been scheduled for August 2015. I would like to thank all who have donated to assist in these matters. They are expensive and my fees are now in the vicinity of $40,000 and rising. I simply would not have been able to undertake this effort without your support.

Unfortunately, these matters have reduced the amount of time I can spend writing. I do find this extremely frustrating although I will post whenever I can. An additional hindrance is the fact that I have also been forced to take action to ensure my family's safety. Gary Burns has bandied my family's address around to numerous people and organizations, including Islamic groups. As you can imagine, this has caused considerable stress and remedying it will take a great deal of time, effort and money.

Please rest assured that I will continue to fight because at the end of the day these battles are not just mine. My children's freedom

The good news is that Gary Burns has now admitted that he has lodged multiple and duplicate complaints against me. This has resulted in a fourth matter being dismissed and I am hopeful that more will follow.

As such, there is now a serious body of evidence that the New South Wales Anti-Discrimination Board, which oversees complaint investigations, has failed completely in its responsibilities and statutory duties. I am now working with my legal team to ensure that this absolute breach of natural justice and procedural fairness is addressed. The days of the New South Wales Anti-Discrimination Board rubber stamping through the complaints of its most prolific customer are over.

For those who are interested, my legal challenge against the Chief of Defence Force's decision to terminate my commission is also continuing.

is at stake in the future, and so is yours right now.

An Argument Against Legalising Same-Sex Marriage By Mrs. Vera West

"My Father was Gay: Why I Oppose Legalising Same-Sex Marriage", by Dawn Stefanowicz is a moving article published by the Hawaii Free Press, April 13, 2015 (<http://www.hawaiifreepress.com/ArticlesMain/tabid/56/ID/15029/My-Father-Was-Gay-Why-I-Oppose-Legalizing-Same-Sex-Marriage.aspx>) Dawn Stefanowicz was brought up by a homosexual father and was "unwittingly identified" under the GLBT (Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual and Transsexual) umbrella.

Dawn was taught to be respectful to her father's sex partners, but even after her father's death from AIDS, she felt that he would not support same-sex marriage. Observing Canada, which passed same-sex marriage laws in 2005, and warning the US, she says that the legal erasure of "natural parent" and replacement with a gender-neutral "legal parent" has meant that the state now defines parenthood so that governments have usurped parental rights. The autonomy of biological parents is squashed. If you teach your children that marriage should be between a man and a woman, then you could be frog-marched before the Human Rights Commission. Sexual orientation is a protected category under Canada's hate crime laws, and the Commission has the power to enter private residences to obtain evidence of hate speech.

In short, one should oppose all aspects of the Regime's attempts to control thought and define thought crimes.

The Terror of Political Correctness By Peter Ewer

The latest piece of home-grown terrorism seems to be the "teen terror" of five teenagers who allegedly planned a terrorist attack on Anzac Day. There is not much information on the planned attack, but it may have involved the use of edged weapons on police officers. Fortunately the Victorian and Australian Federal Police were on top of the matter and nipped this in the bud.

Written before that item hit the news, Jennifer Oriel, "Political Correctness Shackles the War on Terror", The Australian, April 14, 2015, p.12, argues that the "culture of the political Left has enabled terrorism". Not only are, or were, 96% of Australians who enlisted in the Islamic State on Centrelink benefits, but the Left fails to admit, as Oriel puts it that "the problem is Islamism itself". She quotes counter-terrorist expert Patrick Poole who said referring to the Boston bombings as having "A full scale campaign of political correctness... under the Obama administration against any attempt to link jihadi terrorism with anything remotely connected to Islam of any variety (the most radical versions included)". The culture behind terrorism has been ignored, she correctly points out. Thus, regarding the building of mosques, which the Left sees as countering radicalisation, it "often undermines the values of the free world" as US researchers have found that 81% of mosques "contain material advocating Islamist violence".

Oriel concludes: "The findings from empirical research and analysis of failed deracialisation programs demonstrate jihadism is produced by the culture, religion and community of radical Islam. In plain terms, Western jihadism is an Islamic problem. As with any religion, Islam exists on a continuum from fundamentalism to apostasy. But unless we get the balance right, the Islamist core will destroy the freedoms for which our ancestors laid down their lives so that the children and our children's children could be free". Be that as it may attention needs to be directed to our failed so-called "non-discriminatory" immigration programme which created this problem in the beginning.

South African Race Hate Killings: Time for Social Credit By Michael Ferguson

As has been reported at this site and many others, in the rainbow "nation" of South Africa, it is essentially open season on white farmers, who are, with their families, raped, tortured and murdered with impunity. White liberals, living comfortably in the West either do not comment on this (any more than the hard Left had any guilt over endorsing Chairman Mao, even though he killed more people than Hitler) or see it simply as the wages of Apartheid. The idea that "two wrongs don't make a right", is not part of the arithmetic of political correctness.

One problem with the "white racists are getting what they deserve" idea is that black South Africans are violently turning against African refugees flooding into the country. Clashes have occurred and people have died. South African gangs are hunting down refugees from all parts of Africa and the military has now been deployed to deal with this.

The "nation" of South Africa is rocked by crippling unemployment, with the youth unemployment rate greater than 50%. (The Australian, April 23, 2015, p.9) The Zulu king is also firmly in opposition to the illegals and blamed them for rising crime and wanted them to leave. South Africa, post-apartheid, was paraded by the cosmopolitan elites as a post-racial society, a rainbow "nation", where all would live in harmony. Of course the murders of tens of thousands of white farmers could be ignored in this ideological fantasy because whites in South Africa were destined for destruction anyway, as the less-than-secret plan is for whites everywhere. However even the best of plans can become unstuck. Archbishop Desmond Tutu's foundation said "The fabric of the nation is splitting at the seams". It is impossible, I believe, to solve the illegal immigration problem without abandoning liberal and cosmopolitan ways of thinking. Just as thermodynamically a tub of hot water one end and cold the other, will tend to a warm, then cold equilibrium, poor people will gravitate to richer countries because they want to improve their lives. Without immigration restrictions, open borders will lead to the poverty of all as the hot tub of wealth goes cold.

There are various attitudes one can adopt from the cold "let them perish" attitude that has been said by some recently in the media, to the more humane and Christian idea of helping Africans in their homeland so that they don't have to become illegal migrants in the first place. Social credit has a part to play here, an important part. The truth of the matter is that even given the chest-thumping from liberals in the West and token anti-racism, Africa has been largely abandoned as a basket case. To minimise pain of conscience, the Left supports African migration, but with exploding population numbers in Africa, there is no solution because it will lead to a "tragedy of the commons" situation, with us all equal at the bottom. The Left and the financial elite, who cannot yet leave the planet, will ultimately have to resist this, solely because above all else, they value their goodies.

Africa then has nothing to lose and probably has the strength to stand alone. Social crediters should try to establish connections with Africans to see if these nations can save themselves from the fate that the globalists have left them to.

Reed's Iron Law of Politics: They All Get Worse! By James Reed

Prezzy B. Hussein Obama, a man who had a privileged background, going to a top school in Hawaii and then to Harvard University, portrays himself in his rambling meditations about his multiracial identity, as a victim. Maybe he still thinks that he is. But none of this compares to Hillary Clinton who dwarfs even Obama in the chutzpah stakes. Her election campaign aims to fix the dysfunctional US political system with its "unaccountable money". Yes, she knows about money as she is planning to raise AUS$3.2 billion, that's right, not million, but billion, to make her the first female US president. This is the same person who charges US$300,000 for giving a speech and received a $14 million advance for a book. She is supposed to be worried about income inequality. (The W.E.Australian, April 18-19, 2015, p.24) Reed's iron law of politics is that they get worse. Clinton will be worse than Obama, just as Abbott is worse than Rudd and Gillard because these polities build up on the deeds of their predecessors. Thus, Clinton will pursue gun control, race hate issues and the whole feminist bag of tricks. Two terms of misery and civilisational decline. Don't worry Americans, we are not unsympathetic; it's just that we face our own dark lords here, who will be darker still in the future. Australia is already one of the most politically correct and oppressed countries in the Western World - and we haven't seen anything yet!

The Sanctity of the Individual

Where comes the philosophy of "For the greater good," currently one of the slogans used to push vaccines by our "conservative" government, it comes from Marxism. The end justifies the means. A mentor of mine whom I only met once tells how as a young idealistic soldier during WWI he embraced the Marxist ideals seeing a great opportunity for a new world after the war if all would join in the great revolution.

His sister used to send him parcels with the usual socks and biscuits and he would tell her of his great hope for this new era. She eventually stumped him by asking "what are you going to do with all those who disagree with your utopian plans?" He could not answer the question so took it to those leaders of the Marxist movement at the time and found they could not answer it either, but as a Christian he knew the answer deep down and realized he was on the wrong track.

Well might we ask all those who have swallowed the lies of our government's Dept. of Disease and their untested "science" re. vaccines giving immunity. What are you going to do with all those who disagree with you? Forced vaccination? Jail, prison 're-education camps'? That is the deal that was offered in the former Soviet Union for any dissenter. Read Solzhenitsyn. By their fruits you shall know them. Every policy is the result of a philosophy. When man loses sight of God as his Creator and Saviour the state moves in to take His place. And the state (whomever is in control (John Howard, Julia Gillard, Adolf Hitler or Stalin) can only move in to a vacuum, that sacred place of the omnipotent and omnipresent One and thereafter the state takes on these attributes and powers. As Solzhenitsyn answered his people "men have forgotten God that is why all this has happened".

Consider this against the Christian doctrine of the sanctity of the individual. As all are made in the image of their Creator and He gives and allows free will to all to choose or reject Him, who are we to deny our fellows freedom of speech, freedom of enquiry, freedom of association and freedom of action to the extent it does not impinge on another's freedoms.

FREEDOM IS INDIVISIBLE, you cannot lose one without eventually losing all. As the state takes God's place so too it takes control over our every right and freedom. The state that is strong enough to confer "rights" is also strong enough to take them from us. State control of what is regarded as truth is the end result when these rights are lost and truth be known we are almost at that point. We live in a post-Christian nation flying the banners of hell. What is allowed as truth has been state / media controlled for decades, especially since 9/11. Big business today creates its own "science" and the media spouts it incessantly until the mob accepts it as the "truth".

But still God looks for His remnant who will stand up for truth against the lies of today, be it forced vaccination, "the holocaust" which holocaust, more are being murdered in the womb every year now than ever died in Poland and Germany) 9/11, Port Arthur, two world wars and Vietnam. The lies just keep being regurgitated. It is still faith that moves mountains. That mountain is our Government. Christ told us "the Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath. The state is only legitimately functioning if it serves the individual. Marxism is nought but the centralization of power to the state, and away from the individual, of that personal sovereignty (authority) that belongs to God. Were Christians to do the things that Christ taught and apply the lessons He gave to our society three things would happen.

1. Society would be transformed out of its slavery to mammon.
2. Church buildings would not be able to hold those seeking to come to worship.

3. The Church would come under attack from the powers that rule.

Do we believe the prayer Christ taught us to pray, that His will be done on earth? Or have we retreated into our accepted end-time theology theories (that the state is quite happy for us to hold) and "holding the fort" till He comes again? G.K. Chesterton originally asked the question, has Christianity failed? Giving as the answer that it has not been tried yet. It took the mind of C.H. Douglas to state that Christianity has been seen to fail because it has been seen to, that it has not been tried.
