TURNBULL'S BACKFLIP ON ROYAL COMMISSION COULD BELLY FLOP: BOB KATTER WARNS

KAP Federal Member for Kennedy Bob Katter today applauded the Turnbull Government's endorsement of a Royal Commission into the banks, but warns that whilst this battle is won, the war will continue should the Government opt to uphold a 12 month review period and construct the review board from those within the finance industry.

Mr Katter, who was the first Member of Parliament to call for a Royal Commission into the banks in May 2015 and who introduced legislation in the Parliament earlier this year, labelled today's announcement as 'a great victory of the people of Australia'.

"This is a great victory for the ordinary Australians. Today my fellow Australians we have won. We have proved that we can win. The Government has been resistant almost to a point of bringing down their own Government against having a Royal Commission into the banks.

"Resistant to a point where the people had a great stroke of luck and the Liberal Party was one down in the Parliament and since they were one vote down, we could cease control of the Parliament and get through the Royal Commission into the banks.

"But the victory lies with those people that did not cop it from the banks but stood up and fought and fought and fought, and with the meagre resources they had, they went into the courts and got slaughtered, constantly coming to people like myself and the crossbench - together were able to get the victory today"

"I had the very great honour of having drafted the legislation in conjunction with George Christensen; just two ordinary Australians. The leader of the Government is a banker and unfortunately for him, from Goldman Sachs whose history is checkered.

"This is where the second ball game arises. The Government only acted at the request of the banks. They ignored the majority of the Parliament, they ignored the majority (I suspect) of their own Party and they most certainly treated with contempt the view of the people of Australia. They only acted when they got their writing instructions from the banks and that is a terrible indictment of the Government."

Mr Katter said that the substance behind the Royal Commission will come down to the composition of terms of reference of the inquiry and said that appointments to the Commission should be approved by the Parliament.

"We put in our legislation, that there will be three judges and three people from the community.

We don't want Caesar judging Caesar. We don't want just anyone from the financial sector. On our list of names, we suggested Oliver Yates who has a banking background but has proved again and again what he thinks is the right thing and not just what the banks say is the right thing to do. These are the sort of people the people of Australia would trust to do the right thing.

"To my fellow Australians I say this; you have risen up, not given in and fought, you never gave up and you never gave in. You kept out there fighting and fighting. But I warn you, the man from Goldman Sachs is not going to be giving you the inquiry that you want."

THE GREAT COALITION DEATH WISH By James Reed and Arnis Luks

As Alan Jones has Tweeted:

“Labor will win power narrowly in Queensland as a result of the Coalition preferencing Labor over One Nation. The Coalition must have a death wish. More Coalition voters completely angered.”

This is a spot on observation, which has now been shown to be utterly true. The media were lightning quick off the mark to proclaim that One Nation had done poorly in the Queensland election, even though the facts show that the projected swing state wide was + 12.8% and 20%+ by contested seats, good by any measure, : <http://www.heraldsun.com.au/blogs/andrew-bolt/so-which-party-does-the-media-say-flopped/news-story/0079b0f93e1711d9e239e2014295eb1b>

One Nation would have returned a better result if the major parties had not done preference swaps and also colluded together to preference One Nation last: <https://www.theguardian.com/australia-news/2017/nov/27/malcolm-turnbull-says-a-vote-for-one-nation-is-a-vote-for-labor>

Further, One Nation has always had some strategic problems and new Senator Fraser Anning joins the list of usual suspects (spoiler alert-ed) as he opens his mouth: “Fraser Anning, who was sworn in as a federal senator for One Nation before exiting the party, also criticised his former colleagues about the preference strategy they followed during the Queensland poll. “This crazy policy of indiscriminately preferencing against sitting members means that lefties will be returning to George Street and good conservatives will lose their seats, compliments of a supposedly rightwing party,” Anning said Monday.

THOUGHT CRIMES ARE HERE! By Ian Wilson LL.B

The New South Wales government has now introduced thought crime laws:

“The NSW Upper House has passed a bill which will allow the Attorney General to apply to keep an inmate behind bars beyond the completion of their entire sentence if he thinks they may commit a terrorism-related offence sometime in the future, even if they have never committed or even been suspected of engaging in such an offence before.

The Terrorism (High-Risk Offenders) Bill 2017 – which was introduced to parliament by NSW Attorney General Mark Speakman – gives him the power to make rolling applications to the Supreme Court to extend an inmate’s sentence for up to 3 years at a time, up to the end of their life, regardless of what they were originally sentenced for.”

<https://www.sydneycriminalallawyers.com.au/blog/nsw-government-passes-thought-crime-laws/>

The obvious explanation for such laws is to anticipate Islamic terrorists of the future, Muslims who go to jail, then get radicalised in jail. But, in the past our legal

“As the conservative protest party, you would expect One Nation would be supporting the most conservative candidates or members in each seat.

“That’s what I would do and I’m sure it’s what a majority of One Nation voters want.”

(He would do well to look in the mirror as he speaks about strategy. Which side of politics is ‘the spoiler’ Fraser Anning really batting for? - ed)

<https://www.dailytelegraph.com.au/news/national/queensland-election-results-2017-fraser-anning-blames-one-nation-for-labor-win/news-story/0becc6e604fc8b845d91350ad7ca4c90>

So, in summary, things are a mess as usual, but life goes on. Hopefully, One Nation will get their act together. But, beyond this, the major parties will always be against them because they are either side of the same globalist coin.

Like professional wrestling, mainstream politics looks real, but there is just the illusion of opposition, because the two parties present only sham opposition. We saw this back in the 1990s when Mal Fraser contemplated both the Coalition and Labor joining forces to crush One Nation. And, crush it, they did. This goes on across the West as a way of the globalists preserving their power.

There has to be a greater effort made to undermine the credibility of both major parties and to show the sheeple that their comforts, or what they still have, will be soon gone under the present regime. The writing is maybe not on the wall, but it is on the internet, that the economic storm is already blowing in, dumping its first rubble:

<http://www.zerohedge.com/news/2017-11-27/perfect-storm-coming-market-crisis> system has given people the presumption of innocence, and has never before punished merely because it is conjectured that a crime may be committed. A little thing called evidence beyond reasonable doubt was needed, to punish for a crime. There has not been punishments for no crimes at all, outside of police states and nations using terrorism against their own populations. That, now changes.

Such a law would lead to massive abuse and injustice. One could postulate without any evidence any number of hypothetical crimes, and keep someone behind bars for eternity. And, beyond this, such laws create a precedent and a slippery slope. Why stop with people behind bars? Why not use the law to target anyone who may be thought to be able to commit a crime? Following that line, we arrive directly at a police/terrorist state. Australia is now fast going down that road.

The people should be in the streets, raging in anger at this injustice, for, these are the same sensitive souls who saw fit to deliver “justice” on the same sex vote.

Where are you now, social justice Australians, the great 61 percenters? I can’t hear your protest. ***

CONSIDER THE LILIES OF THE FIELD By Betty Luks

One of my granddaughters came to say ‘hello’ recently and shared that she had been looking at the passage in Matthew 6 where Jesus tells his listeners to ‘consider the lilies of the field’. She knows it is a favourite passage of mine, but she wasn’t sure that she had the same idea, the same concept, as I had in my ‘mind’s eye’. The conversation caused me to think of ways that could help her to envisage God ‘clothing’ the lilies of the field.

I had to ‘consider’ very carefully just how to present a picture in her ‘mind’s eye’ of God ‘clothing’ the lilies. After all, it is a privilege to have such a discussion with one of my grandchildren. I couldn’t let such an opportunity pass me by.

Question: How many people just skip through the Bible passage and are left with a mental image of humans being ‘clothed’? That is not what the passage is on about.

The passage in the King James version of Matthew 6: 26-30 reads:

“Behold the fowls of the air: for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they? Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature?

And why take ye thought for raiment? Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin: And yet I say unto you, that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.

Wherefore, if God so clothe the grass of the field, which today is, and tomorrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?”

Ah, thought I, ...

time-lapse photography would do the job. Whilst not of lilies the New Scientist has a time-lapse film of an acorn growing into a sapling oak.

Youtube has many videos of lilies budding, opening up and blooming, but the acorn video is in more detail.

Science may use different terms to that of Religion but both disciplines are referring to the same things in the world we inhabit.

Dorothy L. Sayers says in “Creed or Chaos” (p. 43) “She, (i.e., the Church) must insist strongly that the whole material universe is an expression and incarnation of the creative energy of God, as a book or a picture is the material expression of the creative soul of the artist. For that reason all good and creative handling of the material universe is holy and beautiful and all abuse of the material universe is a crucifixion of the body of Christ...”

Strange words indeed to those who haven’t encountered them before today, but not to those who are familiar with the Christian Creeds in particular the Athanasian Creed. Sayers continues:

“It is not true at all that dogma is ‘hopelessly irrelevant’ to the life and thought of the average man. What is true is that ministers of the Christian religion often assert that it is, present it for consideration as though it were, and, in fact, by their faulty exposition of it make it so. The central dogma of the Incarnation is that by which relevance stands or falls. If Christ was only man, then He is entirely irrelevant to any thought about God; if He is only God, then He is entirely irrelevant to any experience of human life. It is, in the strictest sense, necessary to the salvation of relevance that a man should believe rightly the Incarnation of Our Lord Jesus Christ. Unless he believes rightly, there is not the faintest reason why we should believe at all. And in that case, it is wholly irrelevant to chatter about ‘Christian principles’...” ***

Next Friday will be the final edition of On Target for 2017. It will also be the end of an era for Mrs Betty Luks as the lead writer for the Australian League of Rights. Betty will be moving into a supervisory position starting in the New Year. This will mark about 45 years of continual service to the movement. Betty's story goes back to the League bookshop in Hindley Street, Adelaide in early 1970s. She was part of the regularly rostered team, which included Mary Jonats, Doug and Jean Holmes. Betty began her writing/editing with the journal Ladies Line, and also included Heritage, New Times, New Times Survey, and OnTarget. She also served several terms as National Director. The role as supervisor will be to guide a team of new writers starting next year. It has been a pleasure working with you Betty, and we wish you well and good health as you take one small step back from the front row.

A Magnificent Contribution!

“Well done our good and faithful servant”.

SOME LEFTIES ARE GREAT!?! By Brian Simpson

Brian, have you taken leave of your senses? No, I am referring to left handed people, of which I am one.

A paper in biology letters, "Left-handedness and time pressure in elite interactive ball games by Florian Loffing, Published 22 November 2017. DOI: 10.1098/rsbl.2017.0446, has affirmed the long observed phenomenon, that left handed people are usually better fighters, and better in fast reaction sports, probably because of different neural wiring. As well, right handers really have difficulty dealing with lefties, while lefties live in a biased right handed world, and come to be great with both hands:

"According to the fighting hypothesis, frequency-dependent selection gives relatively rarer left-handers a competitive edge in duel-like contests and is suggested as one mechanism that ensured the stable maintenance of handedness polymorphism in humans. Overrepresentation of left-handers exclusively in interactive sports seems to support the hypothesis. Here, by referring to data on interactive ball sports, I propose that a left-hander's advantage is linked to the sports' underlying time pressure. The prevalence of left-handers listed in elite rankings increased from low (8.7%) to high (30.39%) time pressure sports and a distinct left-hander overrepresentation was only found in the latter (i.e. baseball, cricket and table tennis).

This indicates that relative rarity and the interactive

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

To The Australian

The problems for the federal Coalition are not insurmountable. It just requires Malcolm Turnbull to resign gracefully without necessitating any kind of coup. As another Malcolm in Shakespeare's Macbeth said: 'Nothing in his life became him so much as his leaving of it.' There is heaps of latent talent in the Coalition ranks. A leader and deputy leader will emerge.

- Babette Francis, Toorak, Vic

Wallace Klinck commented:

Well, I hope that Babette is correct but unless they have a realistic understanding of the financial issue they are automatically doomed to failure—for no good reason whatsoever other than ignorance. The latent talent may indeed be present but latent talent is of no avail when it is not correctly and effectively activated and deployed.

Babette knows how to get attention by keeping her messages short—but ultimately they must also be effectively targeted. A PDF is attached for your reference. The document is relatively short but highly concentrated and deals not only with finance and economics but also especially with how these relate to successful human association.

nature of a contest are not sufficient per se to evoke a left-hander advantage. Refining the fighting hypothesis is suggested to facilitate prediction and experimental verification of when and why negative frequency-dependent selection may benefit left-handedness."

Sorry, it is just a biological fact, left handers like me, and not like right handed people like James Reed, have so much going for them:
