In Memoriam Ernst Zundel

By craft they brought you down, but not your name,
 Those adversaries from the dark; so you were kept
 Out of the public ring. Most talk of you was swept
 Into the media limbo by corrupt and dirty game.
 Your body cabined, not your soul, to others' shame,
 You sturdily lived on; no fruitless tears were wept.
 A gnashing of teeth elsewhere, but your spirit leapt
 Higher still and their malice wrote you into fame.

Like Heidegger, you accepted fate without demur,
 In the Black Forest countryside quietly, well,
 Working still to pass on stories that were
 Worth suffering for about enemies most fell.
 Now is the time for Parsifal himself to manifest
 And guide you to Montsalvat and your fellow-blest.

MICHAEL HOFFMAN'S OBITUARY FOR ERNST ZÜNDEL

Ernst Zündel (above, right), with his attorney, Dr. Herbert Schaller, March 1, 2010, just moments after he emerged from Mannheim prison for the first time in five years.

Ernst Zündel died of heart failure on August 5 at his ancestral home in the Black Forest region of southwestern Germany, near Pforzheim, one day before the anniversary of the atomic holocaust in the city of Hiroshima, Japan. He was 78.

He passed away seven years and five months after having served seven years in confinement in Canadian and German prisons for thought crimes committed as a publisher, broadcaster and protestor. To make the inquisition against this German human rights activist palatable to the public, his "crime" is monotonously described as "inciting hatred for years with anti-Semitic activities."

ERNST ZÜNDEL: UNBOWED

A personal Telling Films tribute by Lady Michèle Renouf to German-Canadian artist, publisher and dedicated campaigner for historical truth Ernst Zündel, born 23rd April 1939, died 5th August 2017 at his ancestral home in southern Germany.

Uniquely interviewed as he was released from Mannheim Prison in 2010 and during his journey back to his childhood home in the Black Forest, and updated in this unexpurgated version after Ernst Zündel's death, this film documents his decades of legal struggle for source-critical justice in Canada and Germany, literally illustrated by Ernst's own art works created during his years of imprisonment, and includes an interview with his lawyer Dr. Herbert Schaller. <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=ZUrPiQAe-DM>

SPEAK NOW OR LOSE YOUR FREEDOM By Bernard Gaynor

In news that should worry all Australians, the Coalition government has today told public servants that they can be sacked for their political opinions.

From The Australian:

The Turnbull government will today seek to impose restrictions on public servants criticising the Coalition on social media, warning that employees risk disciplinary action for “liking” anti-government posts or privately emailing negative material to a friend from home.

Documents obtained by The Australian show public servants would also be warned they could be in breach of the public service code of conduct if they do not remove “nasty comments” about the government posted by others on the employee’s Facebook page.”

I have been warning for some time now that workers have lost their political freedom. They, and their political views, are now legally owned by ‘The Company’ 24/7.

This was rammed home by the Full Court of the Federal Court in Chief of Defence Force v Gaynor earlier this year:

“Measured against the respondent’s statements, it is not difficult to conclude that it was open to the appellant to reach the conclusion that the retention of the respondent in the Army was not in the interests of the Army, given the weight placed on the fundamental changes in attitudes and policy about diversity in the ADF, measured against the content, manner and tone of the respondent’s public statements...”

My statements opposed official Defence participation in the Sydney Gay and Lesbian Mardi Gras. Anyone prepared to accept the truth (and the Mardi Gras’ own constitution) knows that this event is political and that it promotes all sorts of things. Like homosexual marriage. Which, apparently, is not government policy (yet).

I also pointed out that Defence’s own policy prohibited uniformed attendance at events of a political nature. So, of course, I was sacked (ironic really considering I expressed views supporting the actual government’s position and Defence’s own written policies).

And then the Full Court found that the Chief of Defence Force was entitled to set Defence on a political course of cultural change (including aspects that were contrary to official government policy) and that it was also lawful to sack me for raising concerns about its process of politicisation.

Lots of people agree with my views. And lots of people don’t. For the purpose of this article that is irrelevant. What is relevant is the totalitarian and communist-like clamp down of freedom of political opinion. This affects all Australians.

ON TARGET

Not that you would know it. From the Catholic Church to the union movement, there has been complete silence even though all will be hit by a new system that says the government can censor, silence and target anyone it pleases on the basis of their political opinion.

I have not had help from any of the institutions that are now seeing their own freedoms eroded through these and other ‘human rights’ law, policies and guidelines, even though my High Court appeal will benefit them all (if it succeeds) or lock the shutters closed (if it does not). The High Court will hear arguments in relation to my application for leave on 18 August. I will keep you posted.

The targets today are public servants. But this policy (and the principal behind it) has enormous scope for mission creep. Tomorrow it will be anyone who has any link with government funding. And that is everyone.

And it will also spread beyond government.

Qantas, it seems to me, can legally decide to require employees to wear symbols supporting its stance in favour of ‘marriage equality’. And it can also, legally, decide to sack any of them who refuse to do so or who might question ‘marriage equality’ on Facebook.

So don’t think the private sector will escape. The same principles apply there as well. The chiefs set the beliefs in today’s brave new world of freedom. And that is simply another way of saying might is right.

The Coalition might think this policy is good because it will prevent public servants from criticising its policies. But, instead, it is just dumb.

Malcolm Turnbull might be many things but there is one thing he won’t be: prime minister for much longer. When he goes, it is likely to be Bill Shorten who replaces him. And, credit where credit is due, when it comes to political purges of the public service and socialist policy, Shorten and Labor have it all over Turnbull and the Coalition. The ‘Blue Team’ might be moving left as fast as they can, but they are mere amateurs at this game. The policy announced today will be a totalitarian disaster under Labor.

And even if the Coalition remains in power for longer than I anticipate, it is still dumb. Every government department now has bizarre politically-correct policies in place. And the public servants who are most likely to feel the pain of these measures (which openly speak of ‘dob ins’) are likely to be those who aggrieve the endlessly offended.

If you work at Centrelink and “like a post” supporting traditional marriage, you could well find yourself subject to investigations for a breach of code of conduct for offensive statements launched by a gay colleague.

(continued from previous page) Ditto if you slave away at the Department of Immigration and share an article about the latest push for Sharia law.

This policy is straight out of the 'Lefty' handbook and it will be policed by Lefties and for Lefties.

Like I said at the start, we should all be concerned. But conservatives should know that they will be likely to suffer most.

Finally, if that doesn't convince you, I hope the sheer hypocrisy will. Public servants have been told that they are likely to breach the APS Code of Conduct if they criticise their department, their minister or even the Prime Minister. So, if that is true, it seems that public servants could face disciplinary action if they share the posts of the Community & Public Sector Union (of which they may well be a member) on their own private Facebook account in their own free time.

H.R.H. PRINCE PHILIP 'BOWS OUT' OF PUBLIC LIFE

For more than 65 years, he has been the unwavering presence alongside the world's longest-reigning living monarch, the consummate consort and royal representative. Now Prince Philip, 96, has completed his 22,219th and final solo public engagement, braving pouring rain to meet Royal Marines at Buckingham Palace.

The Duke of Edinburgh appeared in good spirits, waving to cheering crowds holding Union Jack umbrellas.

Inside the palace gates he joked with the soldiers, who had completed 2,678 kilometre trek to raise money for charity.

"You all should be locked up," quipped the Prince, who is known for his sense of humour and off-colour gaffes.

Philip, the husband of Queen Elizabeth, watched as a unit of marines marched past him in formation in a ceremonial procedure known as taking the salute. Afterwards, the soldiers let out three cheers for the Prince, with one more coming from a watching crowd behind.

As the band played For He's a Jolly Good Fellow, Philip lifted his hat and gave a rare wave — perhaps a sign that he too accepted the significance of the moment.

However, the Australian Public Service Commissioner, John Lloyd, can use his official account to attack the union and its stance. Like this tweet (which is just one of many):

Time for the CPSU to demonstrate awareness of national concerns beyond their immediate industrial strategy. <https://t.co/4IIMZ22ZS2>
— John Lloyd (@JohnLloyd_APSC) March 23, 2016

I don't bring this up to indicate that I support the CPSU or any other union. In fact, it promotes many things that I vehemently disagree with. But if we live in a world where union members are no longer free to express their views about government policy, we are probably living in a world that is closer to communist than free.

And that's not a world I wish to live in. Or to hand to my children.

Philip has been Captain General of the marines since 1953, and has a personal connection with the Royal Navy after serving with the force in World War II. He announced he was stepping down from public duties in May.

The Royal recently joked about his big retirement day, telling celebrity chef Prue Leith: "I'm discovering what it's like to be on your last legs."

Philip has given 5,496 speeches, written 14 books and gone on 637 solo visits overseas. He has championed environmental and conservation issues, and has interests in science, engineering and industry.

He is a patron, president or a member of over 780 organisations. He will continue to be associated with them, but will not play an active role by attending engagements.

While he has enjoyed overall good health, Philip has been admitted to the hospital on a number of occasions in the past few years for abdominal surgery, bladder infections and a blocked coronary artery.

'Consort of the Year'

Philip has poked fun at himself and his advancing years. In a letter to The Oldie magazine in 2011, he said he appreciated being named "Consort of the Year".

"There is nothing like it for morale to be reminded that the years are passing ever more quickly, and that bits are beginning to drop off the ancient frame," he wrote. "But it is nice to be remembered at all."

The palace has said his health was not behind the retirement decision.

The Queen, the world's longest-reigning living monarch who celebrated her 91st birthday in April, will continue to carry out a full program of official engagements. Source: <http://www.abc.net.au/news/2017-08-03/prince-philip-queen-elizabeth-royal-husband-retires/8769254> ***

HIGH TECH HOMELESSNESS By Uncle Len, the Low Tech Homeless

As a symbolic representation of the existential homelessness of modern Western man, I am always on the lookout for material to tell you about that affirms my raison d'être, a word which I found on-line, but don't know the meaning of, having no meaning or point for my existence.

Anyway, I am getting off topic, which for me is remarkable. But, what was my topic? Think, Len, think. Your fans expect a lot from you, like coherence and all that. Now I remember, I have re-read my title...high tech homelessness. You see the high tech elite at Silicon Valley, which is, I suppose is an entire valley full of silicon, are living in their cars because of the high cost of living. HA! HA, again. Why don't they just clean up all the silicon and make homes for people? Or, bring in more migrants, who through their economic magic will make even more homes?

Here are comments from one car-dwelling high tech lady:

"I tell people all the time, stop looking at what somebody got and what you see on the outside.

HERE COMES THE AUSTRALIA CARD AGAIN By James Reed

The political class have really wanted a national ID card, as it is just the thing which any fashionable authoritarian anti-freedom government has.

This card was defeated in the past, but now it is coming back, like a zombie, to eat the flesh of our freedom:

<http://www.dailytelegraph.com.au/news/nsw/id-card-back-on-agenda-in-national-security-overhaul/news-story/68b6a39817cf4b59c6fed03c7129f058>

This time round terrorism is being used to scare us into adopting this most un-Australian of documents, and Pauline Hanson has fallen for the need for it, because of her knee-jerk fear of terrorism and welfare fraud:
<http://www.couriermail.com.au/news/queensland/one-nations-pauline-hanson-pushing-for-national-id-card-to-combat-welfare-fraud/news-story/518510e317397482ab904bdf07a89fad>

It will do nothing of the sort, and is useless against home-grown terrorism. They will just commit terrorism, with their ID card in their back pocket.

Contact Pauline and tell her to wake up to the loss of freedom which this ID card is going to bring. We will join the family of Islamic and Middle Eastern countries in having this, and it does nothing to stop terrorism. ***

Everything I do here, this is my life. This car means everything to me because it's all I have basically. I'm very embarrassed because I don't want to be looked down upon or talked about...[my colleagues] would be shocked that I'm going through that because they would be like 'I see you smiling at work, you appear to be happy. You look normal, you look clean...I think that companies need to look at the salaries. Are we paying employees enough to survive?'"

<http://collapse.news/2017-08-05-facebook-employees-are-homeless-and-living-out-of-their-own-cars.html>

Yes, this Black woman, known as "pinkie," because she has a pink car, pink hair, a pink dog, and everything except pink skin, wears her homelessness as a matter of pride. And, good for her. Homelessness is the trend of the future, especially for Anglo-Australians, and since none of them (or not enough of them) had the brains or guts to fight against immigration-based displacement, and the corrupt economic/financial system...well,...most are all going to end up just as crazy as me when the full weight of dispossession sinks them:

It is not so bad. I have many friends, who scamper out at night to eat the food scraps, and sing nervous songs to me, in their insect voices, or so it sounds after my meds and alcohol wear off, which must never be mixed. Most of us too, will get to make new friends, but probably of the insect world. ***
