THOUGHT OF THE WEEK: “It is this necessity for the recognition of the psychological moment, and the fitting to that moment of appropriate action, which should be present in the minds of that small minority which is seized of the gravity of the present times. To have a clear understanding of the principles which underlie the problem is essential to those who may hope to play a part in its solution; it is even desirable that skeleton plans should be in existence to meet the situation as it can be seen to exist; but nothing can be more fatal to a successful issue than the premature publication of cut-and-dried arrangements which are likely to be out of date before their adoption can be secured. As the world is constituted today, effective action is only possible through certain centres of influence; that is to say, short of complete social anarchy as a preliminary to a new world, it is necessary to work through the arrangements which have grown up in the system with which we are all familiar.”

C.H Douglas, Social Credit, rev. ed. (New York: Gordon Press, 1973), 196-199.

POLITICIANS AGAIN SHOW “REAL GENIUS” By Viv Forbes

Back in the chaotic dying days of the Whitlam-Cairns-Connor government, Canberra was buzzing with Rex Connor’s grand plans for a national energy grid and gas pipelines linking the NW Shelf to the capital cities, all to be funded by massive foreign loans arranged by a mysterious Pakistani named Khemlani. Malcolm Frazer staged a parliamentary revolt. The economy slumped. A British observer at the time noted “Any fool can bugger up Britain but it takes real genius to bugger up Australia.” Australian politicians are again showing real genius. Now, we have incredible tri-partisan plans to cover the continent with a spider-web of transmission lines connecting wind/solar “farms” sending piddling amounts of intermittent power to distant consumers and to expensive battery and hydro backups - all funded by electricity consumers, tax-assisted speculators and foreign debt.

We are the world’s biggest coal exporter but have not built a big coal-fired power station for 11 years. We have massive deposits of uranium but 100% of this energy is either exported, or sterilised by the Giant Rainbow Serpent, or blocked by the Green-anti’s. Australia suffers recurrent droughts but has not built a major water supply dam for about 40 years, and the average age of our hydro-electric plants is 48 years. And when the floods do come, desperate farmers watch as years of rain water rush past to irrigate distant oceans.

Once, Australia was a world leader in exploration and drilling – it is now a world leader in legalism, red tape and environmental obstructionism. Once, Canberra and the states encouraged oil and gas exploration with geological mapping and research - now they restrict land access and limit exports. Once, Australia was a world leader in refining metals and petroleum - now our expensive unreliable electricity and green tape are driving these industries and their jobs overseas. Once, Australia’s CSIRO was respected for research that supported industry and for doing useful things like controlling rabbits and prickly pear and developing better crops and pastures. Now CSIRO panders to global warming hysteria and promotes the fairy story that carbon taxes and emissions targets can change the world’s climate. Once, young Australians excelled in maths, science and engineering. Now, they are brain-washed in gender studies, green energy non-science and environmental activism. Once, the opening of a railway or the discovery of oil, coal, nickel or uranium made headlines.

Today’s Aussies harass explorers and developers, and queue at the release of the latest iPad. As Australia’s first people discovered, if today’s Australians lack the will or the knowledge to use our great natural resources, more energetic people will take them off us.

EDITORS NOTE CONCERNING ELECTRICITY PRICES

Our replacement PM promised to honour Paris agreement as soon as he drew first breath. Then there are others making their statement: "Adam Bandt's partner should visit a few families who can't pay their power bills. What say you spend a bit of time with some pensioners freezing or families who can't afford their electricity bills now?" Here are a few people you could contact:

<http://www.michaelsmithnews.com/2018/09/adam-bandts-partner-should-visit-a-few-families-who-cant-pay-their-power-bills.html>

An Australian clothing charity has handed out more than 55,000 winter garments this year – and an increasing proportion of recipients are families who simply can't pay their heating bills. A national army of knitters is in desperate need of more volunteers to help them meet the growing demand for winter woollies. Knit One Give One founder Ros Rogers said the organisation has already donated more than 55,000 items this year. "The need has gone up, definitely," she said ... "We're not even talking necessarily about the homeless, or people sleeping rough – we're talking about families who can't afford to run their heating."

This is what happens when you scorn cheap and reliable coal power, throw $3.6 billion at renewable energy subsidies (just this year) and otherwise use the Australian public as lab mice in a UN-appeasing climate-virtue experiment. People end up broke and begging for clothes. ***

SATAN AND POLITICS? By Chris Knight

I am just a man of simple Christian faith, no theologian, so this is all straight from the heart.

I began thinking about the issue of Satan in politics when reading the claim made by Italy's largest Catholic magazine, that Interior Minister Matteo Salvini is literally satanic for wanting immigration restricted:

<https://www.breitbart.com/london/2018/07/27/italys-largest-catholic-magazine-compares-salvini-to-satan-for-immigration-policy/>

"Famiglia Cristiana, Italy's top selling Catholic publication, has splashed a photo of Interior Minister Matteo Salvini on its cover this week, with the provocative caption "Get behind me, Salvini" — in Latin. Assailing Mr. Salvini for his efforts to curb illegal immigration in the country, the cover caption of Thursday's issue makes reference to the words of Jesus, "Get behind me, Satan!", reported in Saint Matthew's gospel account. The publication accuses Salvini, the 45-year-old leader of the League party and a Catholic, of having abandoned the biblical injunction to "welcome the stranger" and of using "aggressive tones" in describing Italy's migrant crisis.

Famiglia Cristiana notes the growing chorus of Catholic voices — from the Italian bishops' conference, to individual bishops, to religious priests and sisters — that has spoken out in opposition to Salvini's immigration policies."

This is just gutter level propaganda for a Catholic audience as has been argued many times at this site. The parable of the good Samaritan, as told in Luke 10:30-35, does not support open borders immigration, for how could it, such an idea would be regarded as a military invasion by wiser people from the ancient world:

"In reply Jesus said: "A man was going down from Jerusalem to Jericho, when he was attacked by robbers. They stripped him of his clothes, beat him and went away, leaving him half dead.

31 A priest happened to be going down the same road, and when he saw the man, he passed by on the other side. 32 So too, a Levite, when he came to the place and saw him, passed by on the other side.

33 But a Samaritan, as he traveled, came where the man was; and when he saw him, he took pity on him.

34 He went to him and bandaged his wounds, pouring on oil and wine. Then he put the man on his own donkey, brought him to an inn and took care of him.

35 The next day he took out two denarii[c] and gave them to the innkeeper. 'Look after him,' he said, 'and when I return, I will reimburse you for any extra expense you may have.'

As I read these plain words, the good Samaritan helped the man who was half dead and in genuine need, who was not migrating illegally to improve his life at the expense of the host nation. The good Samaritan took the man to an inn and paid for him to be cared for. No doubt, everyone would expect the man, once he was better, to be a man and go on his way, not wanting continuous welfare support. As I read the parable, this is a very anti-immigration story. Help others where they are, without necessarily taking them into your home. In fact, we do not even know where the home of the good Samaritan was and where exactly he came from.

Evil is institutionalised, so that the traditional Christian message of charity (beginning at home) has been replaced by the secular globalist neo-Marxism, which is an organised evil, and as we remind our readers almost every day, hurtling us towards civilisational destruction, much like the demonically-filled Gerasene swine, exorcised by Jesus: Mark 5:1-20; Matthew 8: 28-34; Luke 8: 26-39.

I have not worked out specifically the role of Satan in this, but no doubt he is in this mix, turning 'God's Words' upside down and there are better informed people than I that could write on this to enlighten us all further. ***

Bill Daly, SEEING REALITY BEYOND THE VEIL

Bill believes there is no hope for civilisation without a return to the practical Christianity that built Europe, and a total rejection of the Christ-hating puritan-liberalism that has dominated the West's institutions, including the organised church.

Dr. M. Oliver Heydorn,

HUNGARY DEFIANT IN THE FACE OF EU CENSURE By Soeren Kern

- "We need a new European Commission that is committed to the defense of Europe's borders." — Hungarian Prime Minister Viktor Orbán.
- "A few months ago ... there was an election in Hungary. The Hungarian people decided what should happen, and during the election campaign we discussed all of the issues — including Central European University CEU, the NGOs, and all of the important political issues. And the people decided on these issues. And now the European Parliament is taking upon itself the task of overruling the decision made by the people of Hungary and forcing the Hungarian government to implement what they are attempting to impose on us in place of the people's decision." — Hungarian Prime Minister Viktor Orbán.
- "Hungary and the Hungarian people have been convicted because we have proven that migration is not needed and that it can be stopped." — Hungarian Foreign Minister Peter Szijjártó.
- "Hungary's decisions are made by the voters in parliamentary elections. What you are claiming is no less than saying that the Hungarian people are not sufficiently capable of being trusted to judge what is in their own interests. You think that you know the needs of the Hungarian people better than the Hungarian people themselves.... This report applies double standards, it is an abuse of power, it oversteps the limits on spheres of competence, and the method of its adoption is a treaty violation." — Hungarian Prime Minister Viktor Orbán.

The European Parliament has voted to pursue unprecedented disciplinary action against Hungary over alleged breaches of the European Union's "fundamental values." The EU has accused the Hungarian government of attacks against the media, minorities and the rule of law. Hungarian Prime Minister Viktor Orbán has denied the charges, and said they are a retaliation for his government's refusal to take in migrants from the Muslim world. The censure represents another salvo in a showdown between pro- and anti-EU forces over populism and nationalism ahead of European Parliament elections in May 2019.

During a session of the European Parliament in Strasbourg on September 12, MEPs voted 448-to-197 to trigger Article 7 against Hungary. It was the first time that such parliamentary action has been taken against an EU member state; the move can ultimately lead to Hungary losing its voting rights in EU institutions. Orbán is accused of undermining the independence of Hungary's judiciary and media; waging a legal battle against the Central European University (CEU), founded by the Hungarian-born philanthropist George Soros; mistreating asylum seekers and refugees and introducing a law that makes it a criminal offense for lawyers and activists to help them.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

To The Age No, the idea of monarchy has not become "outmoded" ("Popular royal visit a welcome reminder", 12/9), but nor, for that matter, has the idea of republicanism. The question is what is best for Australia now and in the coming years. It so happens that we have a particularly good compromise at the present time: we enjoy the sacred and historical glamour of royalty in a form that is constitutionally limited (thus avoiding royal tyranny) and we have a royal family that acts responsibly for the common welfare and looks likely to do so through

ACTION TARGET

The revised Trans Pacific Partnership is back on the agenda. Australia is likely to commit to the TPP unless a flood of protesting letters arrive on the politicians' desks. It is time once again to fire off some requests to our MP's and Senators. We might acknowledge that there is some benefit in Trade Deals but not as many as we are told. Experts claim for example that the gain for Australian income would be just one percent. The downside is the threat of Australia being sued by foreign corporations if any of our new laws negatively impact on their profit. The plain packaging of cigarettes is one example.

Other problems include; difficulty in preventing imports which potentially threaten our bio-security. Also inability to support farmers like pork producers who are about to close their business due to pork imports which flow freely into Australia.

Now is an excellent time to contact the cross-bench and minor or independent MP's because the Coalition lack a majority in the House. As many ALP MP's as possible should be asked to oppose the TPP as they have previously indicated. Urge them to maintain their opposition and vote against the TPP.

Don't miss this opportunity to put an end to Australian involvement in the TPP. - ND ***

BRITISH POLICE FIND PUTIN'S PASSPORT AT SCENE OF SALISBURY POISON ATTACK

We've been wrong all along, Putin must have done it - ED

Salisbury (dpo) - Last doubts over Russia's guilt in poisoning former spy Sergei Skripal have been eliminated. As the British government announced today, the passport of Russian president Vladimir Putin was found at the scene in Salisbury. According to Prime Minister Theresa May, the passport was only now found in another search of the scene, as it had been hidden under a fallen leaf.

<https://archive.is/khBY0#selection-399.1-409.183>

"Russia has 24 hours to extradite Vladimir Putin for questioning in London", according to a statement issued by the British government.

"Refusal will be taken as admission of guilt." ***

the next two or three reigns. The downside is that we do not have a completely independent royal sovereign of our own. Better, however, to live with what we have than to change to a republic which would be dominated by foolish left-wing ideology and big business interests behind its corporate and party political support. US novelist Marilynne Robinson, a Democrat and admirer of Barack Obama, offers a noble vision of a different kind of republic in her new book of essays, What Are We Doing Here?; but there is no pressing need for Australia to go there now. - Nigel Jackson, Belgrave, Vic ***

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

To The Australian Paul Kelly underrates the importance of conservative and traditionalist ideas to any successful resurgence of the Liberal Party under Scott Morrison ("Morrison's relying on values to silence tribal drums", 12/9). Negative comment about "tribal conservatives" and the "flawed agenda" of the "populist conservative media" is not illuminating or helpful. Kelly provides no evidence to support his claim that "the conservative wing of the Liberals in recent times has become too narrow, too introspective and too out of touch with mainstream opinion".

It may not be so much that Tony Abbott "failed as PM to sell his conservative convictions to the public" as that a coalition of his opponents successfully undermined him by an intense artillery of hostile comment. Morrison and the Liberals need to return to defence of the monarchy, protection of free speech and the maintenance of national unity against the "indigenous" separatist campaign.
