THOUGHT OF THE WEEK:

‘Where no counsel is the people fall; but in the multitude of counsellors there is safety’.

Inscription that greets all visitors to Parliament House in Melbourne <https://www.parliament.vic.gov.au/archive/hist.html>

SUMMARY AND WARNINGS By Arnis Luks

- Responsible Government - the most stable form of government and the best defence against bureaucratic tyranny, when the Executive is answerable to parliament, the Government passing an annual Appropriation and Supply bill through both parliamentary houses, which could trigger an election if it fails to find passage (maintain confidence) through the upper house; and finally the Reserved Powers vested in the Crown. All three are mechanisms to balance powers and overcome political tyranny - a trinitarian model of balancing power across the parliament.
- The Victorian Constitution (Parliamentary Reform) Act 2003 has deconstructed this balanced model for a single house virtually unanswerable between elections. Appropriation and supply bills since 2003 are now sent for Royal Assent automatically after one month delay from the upper house.
- The Governor can no longer remove ministerial commissions without the approval from the Premier, nor call for an early election. Looking in detail at this model is important to find our way back from totalitarianism.
- Legislative, Executive and the Judicature - initiating the laws, administering the laws and adjudicating the laws completes another Trinitarian model. If the Executive operates outside the law it is up to the Legislative and Judicature to limit them from operating arbitrarily e.g. hiring untrained security guards, declaring a nightly curfew with no medical justification - similar to the historical divine right of kings.
- Political appointments to our High Court, Federal Court and Supreme Court can curtail natural justice expected from these institutions. The people of USA are acutely aware of the politicised-appointment to the Supreme Court of USA prior to the November Presidential election.
- The political party apparatus regardless of flavour, locks the representatives into conformity, rather than impartial representation towards responsible government. The party system was designed to achieve policy outcomes for vested interests, whether big business or big government.
- The will of the people has no clear nor effective voice in our parliaments. Parliament is in need of an unbroken input from the 'receivers' of policy outcomes by genuine participatory democracy.

Warnings

The warnings from retired Judges, Queens Counsels and Barristers, in regard to the Andrews Government's COVID-19 Omnibus (Emergency Measures) and Other Acts Amendment Bill 2020 - is offering some hope.

Ian Wilson LL.B has explained these issues in more detail in our blog here:

Lawyers Against Covid-19 By Ian Wilson LL.B and again here:

Challenging the Lockdown ... At Long Last By Ian Wilson LL.B

and especially in light of the recent loss of memory by the Executive about 'who gave the orders' here:

What Do We Know About Industrial Manslaughter Law in Victoria? By Ian Wilson LL. B

This 'voice of reason' shows possibilities for other natural associations to do similar: participatory-democracy from the ground up, from people who know best, who can see the ramifications or experience the direct results of policy. There have been several doctor groups trying to speak out about the medical ramifications of the extended lockdown but have been quickly muzzled by other more powerful forces: social media and MSM censorship. Single issue parties historically have not worked well, but natural organic associations may. And why would the proposition of natural associations speaking on behalf of their people be different from another political party?

Organic - From The Roots

If natural associations extended their original commission to include political representation and then were able to rally around a regional candidate for the upper house, could this change the balance of power in the Victorian Parliament more towards responsible government? There certainly are natural associations within communities that could do with finding a political voice. Let us explore this scenario further.

Historically there have been trade-guilds, farmers associations, home owner groups, housewives associations, traditional family and values associations. The idea of participatory democracy is not new, but is novel. Australians preference sport or entertainment over politics. The box has become our modern era opiate. In light of the demonstrated political tyranny, any strategy to overcome must develop from the roots and provide a permanent political solution - devolution.

The difference between political parties and natural associations is that the natural associations are receiving the products, the end results of policy. Home owners rather than builder associations, local farmers and irrigators rather than the MDBA or the National Farmers Federation, having input into the policy for availability, affordability, and reliability of water, power, transport and fuel, rather than the centralist TPP or MDBA debacle. If homeowners, farmers or irrigators were able to rally around suitable regional candidates, would you vote for their candidate in the upper house? Not necessarily as a 1st preference, but maybe the 3rd or 4th, or even the 5th. Can you see something like this unfolding in contrast to the political party duopoly? The duopoly may still have preferences deals between each other, but perhaps a preference whisperer amongst these natural associations can help to guide their own preference deals.

Other Natural Associations

The traditional family and values is another of these natural associations, which do not find an effective voice in our parliaments, and would have plenty to say about many 'off limit' subjects e.g local council land-planning departments do not ensure a sufficiency of supply of available land, but rather limit supply to increase the price of land (the benefit towards developers), and through increased rates revenue for themselves. The traditional family and values and home owners, are both milked by the system to keep these very groups afloat, a never ending gravy train. Being indebted for generations with medium density housing and a light building code house; is this really the best that could be on offer for availability, affordability and reliability?

Educational options, natural or chemical-free foods, alternative remedies are other natural associations receiving the products, the results from vested interests.

There may also be a preference to not have children's shirt sleeves rolled up ready for the array of annual jobs, with a differing view to limit to that which is demonstrably necessary, without the blackmail of 'no job no pay'. When you disassemble the political narrative you realise the political party machine has been in the control of big business for a long, long time. The family values, farmers, irrigators and home owners have had to accept the policy crumbs that fall off the political table. Employment, establishing a family, education and home ownership are the natural priorities for the young. Demographic viewpoints gradually change over time.

The Active and Responsible Voter

By natural associations placing priority work-orders towards parliament through the upper house, this could cause an entirely different political result. It is a matter of balancing powers - government/bureaucracy, vested interests, participatory electorate. Without a strong community involvement into the political process the existing narrative will continue unabated. The will of the people is the only force capable of overcoming vested interests' control within the political party machine.

I noted within the Liberal and National parties, there is now a green movement headed by merchant banker Malcolm Turnbull and vaccine developer Lucy Turnbull.

Monetary Reform

In this scenario of a change to voting patterns, monetary reform (to liquidate prices) becomes a viable priority, limited only by "what is physically possible being made financially possible". With a National Dividend and the Consumer Price Discount - sufficient purchasing power can be made available to the consuming public AND costs generated from production can also be liquidated by industry. This form of distributism is the third branch to the capitalist and socialist financial duopoly. It balances forces, while still appropriately rewarding initiative and enterprise, and also ensuring the social conscience is satisfied, by distributing the fruit of production in an fair and equitable manner. Social Credit is a moral answer to this modern dilemma.

Environmental Husbandry

Farmers, growers and market gardeners are the natural custodians towards the environment. Under existing financial orthodoxy farmers, growers and market gardeners are financially compelled to work their assets harder to recover expenses. Balancing the financial system under the social credit model would allow farmers, growers and market gardeners to reinvest into their soil, even capture carbon by increasing the humus levels. With soil vitality comes improved food quality and better human health. Given a choice that was not price related, would you buy organic, or spray-free food over food or soil chemical treated?

The receivers of policy outcomes have no effective representation within our parliaments, but vested interest certainly do. This will not change until individuals choose to change the circumstances themselves. A participatory electorate is morally unavoidable.

This is my Social Credit Thinking. ***

AUSTRALIAN EVIDENCE OF A NEW ICE AGE? By James Reed

I am a great believer in global climate change; not warming, but cooling, always feeling in my water that a new ice age is coming, and scientists whom I read in the 1970s told me that, and that is about how up to date I am, which is impressive. Take the present cold snap, with Antarctica dumping its coldness upon us, no concern that I can't even feel my fingers as I type this. I can't afford heating and am locked down, like Victorian (i.e. 1800s) prisoners, in an icy dungeon, to keep safe from Covidy.

WASPS AND FIGS By Mrs Vera West

I like figs, and like most of us all I enjoy sitting under my back-yard fig tree, embracing my individual freedom, or what freedom I used to have before we in Melbourne lost everything. And I imagine that the anti-freedom police will be here soon to cut down my metaphorical fig tree. Shades of Adam and Eve! Anyway, blow me over, no easy task given my whale-like weight, there are wasps who live in figs. Didn't know that, but now I do.

<https://articles.mercola.com/sites/articles/archive/2020/09/19/dead-wasp-in-every-fig.aspx>

“If you're a fig lover, this next sentence may be hard for you to swallow. The figs you're eating could have a dead wasp stuck in them. I know that probably makes you squirm, but it sounds more dramatic than it is. You may think the idea of wasps inside a fig is gross, but it's actually pretty amazing to see how nature knows exactly what it needs to do to allow both plant and insect species to survive.

Figs and fig wasps have a mutually beneficial relationship — something that's officially called mutualism — that developed over millions of years of evolution. They need each other to survive. Fig wasps help pollinate figs and, in turn, the figs provide a safe place for the wasps to lay their eggs. This relationship is crucial to a balanced ecosystem and is also crucial to you enjoying a fresh fig or that fig jam you love.

So, don't let this tit-bit of information make you shy away from eating figs. The fruit, or technically flower, is full of resistant starch, potassium and other nutrients such as magnesium and choline, that help keep you healthy. Plus, you're probably already eating a lot of bugs without even realizing it. Read on to see what I mean.

Why Do Figs Need Wasps?

Figs are often eaten as a fruit, but they're actually inverted flowers with a fascinating biology. Unlike other flowers that bloom and expand outwardly, fig flowers bloom inside the fig's pod. Because the flowers are on the inside, they require a special system for Even snow in South Australia, up in the Flinders Ranges, wherever they are, somewhere up north, maybe near Adelaide, it does not matter much to me, because I am an arrogant Victorian, made more arrogant by being shut up in a chicken coop for what, a year now? Anyway, I argue that this is due to global cooling, since whenever there is a bushfire, well it's global warming. So, by parity of reason, when there is a cooling event, it must be evidence of the opposite namely an ice age.

You can't have your ice cream cake and eat it too.

pollination — and that's where the female fig wasps come in.

Each flower produces a single fruit called an achene that's composed of a single shell and a hard seed. Because several flowers grow inside the fig pod, there are also several of these hard-shelled fruits. That's what gives fresh figs their seeded inside and signature crunch.

Female fig wasps enter a fig through small passageways called ostioles. The ostioles are so narrow that the fig wasps actually lose their wings and antenna when traveling through them. Because of this, they can get in the figs, but they usually cannot get out. That's OK with them, though, because their sole purpose is reproduction.

There are female and male figs. The female figs are the ones we eat, while the male figs serve solely as a place for fig wasps to reproduce. Once inside a male fig, the females lay their eggs. Eventually the eggs hatch and then the baby male wasps dig tunnels through the fig so that the baby female wasps, covered in pollen, can escape and continue the cycle in another fig.

However, if a fig wasp enters a female fig, she can't lay her eggs. Instead, she pollinates the flowers inside the fig, but then stays behind, living out the rest of her maximum 48-hour life cycle, and dying inside the fig.”

God has been truly amazing in creating natural wonders where nothing goes to waste. And, I don't mind eating insects while I devour my figs. Thus, I will continue to sit under my fig tree, eating insect skeletons. And, why not, for what faces us now are campaigns of fear to freak out populations, and control our minds, without even yet moving to mind controlling drugs, making us all, all the little people, little more than fig wasps, anyway.

LETTERS TO THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT CANDIDATES AND MEMBERS OF THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL OF VICTORIA

There are now two additional Letter Templates in our Actionist Corner Library for you to make good use of. It is vital at this time in history that as many as possible be willing and able to do their CIVIC duty.

The Scenario suggestions from the front page are not unprecedented, but have been done in the Victorian Federal seat of INDI by willing left-wing actionists, to unseat (Lib) Sophie Mirabella and place (Ind) Cathy McGowan as their representative. Similar results were achieved in the South Australian Federal seat of Mayo, where (Centre Alliance) Rebekha Sharkie held off against the (Lib) Downer family dynasty. Social media did play a significant part, but so did an electorate who had the same major party tripe being served up every election. The historical flavour of empty promises had gone sour.

Victoria is the live testing ground for the Great Reset from the World Economic Forum towards Technocracy - Ruled by Experts. Several of us here believe Daniel Andrews has done us a favour by going off prematurely, which has given us a fighting chance to throw off totalitarianism using the Constitutional and Legal Framework inherited from our forefathers, without a violent revolution, instead a velvet cultural revolution of spiritual regeneration, binding us back to reality roots.

The League offers a unique service for our now extensive community, of having faithfully recorded and disseminated the political events over the previous 100 years. We also have a vast array of difficult to obtain books available from our own VeritasBooks.com.au. Over the past 20 years there have been concerted efforts to build the Online Archives and Libraries to cover thousands of important political and cultural documents that can provide a wealth of information readily available for your computer desktop re-search.

The educational works of M. Oliver Heydorn Ph.D available as 'print on demand' from BookDepository and other major outlets. Lives of Our Own was the inspiration for this OnTarget - subsidiarity, solidarity, distributism.

With the expansion of our Online Video Conferencing we have been able to bring two disciples of Social Credit, Wallace and Robert Klinck from Canada into our weekly Broadcasts and Podcasts, all available from our websites.

Social Credit is the 'science of human association' measured in terms of human satisfaction. Victoria is demonstrating the dis-credit, the totalitarian version of human association - gangsters running a police state, of arbitrary arrest and imprisonment, proclamation by decree and semi-permanent lockdown, rather than the accepted common law as the historic, cultural and legal environment for personal, responsible, freedom of speech, of association, of movement and of action.

The 3 speakers at the League of Rights Webinar can now be viewed online discussing our Rights and Freedoms.

Robert Balzola: First of all, CH Douglas suggested that security in what we have is required: freedom of action, thought and speech, and a more abundant life for all is wanted. Justice is the prime aim behind all natural laws whether they affect the economy or political matters. View Robert here: <https://www.bitchute.com/video/MDPA2iO6KMrq/>

Bernard Gaynor: The business of bureaucracy is to get us what we want, not to annoy and hinder us by taking from us by taxation and irritating restrictions those facilities that we should otherwise have. Bernard's strong faith ensures him seeing the goodness as well as the evil and he urges people not to let the evil dominate their thinking.
