KLAUS SCHWAB, YOUNG GLOBAL LEADERS, & AUSTRALIAN POLITICIANS By Arnis Luks

Over 40 years ago my brother and I trekked north for a month, driving his XC Alan Moffat Special 302 V8 Falcon towards the northern parts of Queensland. I remember it quite vividly as we covered, for us both, unknown parts of Australia's east coast and the hinterland. It was around June and from the northern parts of New South Wales going north the weather was fine and everywhere was lush with growth. It seemed as if every time we worked our way through another mountain range there was another rural town, another giant cane field or other tropical agricultural pursuit, and then another PowerStation. I gathered that the cane held a dual purpose, in that burning off the residual growth and part of the husk prepared it for sugar extraction and the heat energy created from this pre-refining was converted into electricity. The resourcefulness of the locals with their energy, drive, and their ease of adapting to local circumstances and their semi-tropical climate conditions impressed me.

Looking further south, another quite vivid memory was the tunnel opened with picks and shovels through a hill to redirect water towards a gold panning location in Victoria. Those miners saw fit to hand dig through several hundred metres of hill to complement their efforts in panning, sifting through the tailings washed down by the seasonal creek. I duck-walked through that tunnel of several hundred meters, which was completely dark and at its narrowest point providing only just sufficient clearance for me to crouch right down to get through, only using the back of my hands (above and in front) as my guide. These two vivid memories reinforce what the 'driven' individual working in community can achieve, which at times is a huge undertaking.

When Australia was colonised, there were no huge fields of agriculture, fences, roads, nor tunnels, nor buildings, nor any type of infrastructure to speak of. The Europeans that arrived started from scratch. They had their initiative, cultural inheritance, their know-how, and an egalitarian Spirit due to the stark necessity to collaborate to tame this rugged land. Nowadays, as I trek around Australia, even across the deserts, outback or semi-remote Nullarbor, I find regular comfort stations, eateries and accommodation.

'Bloomin luxury' you might say, and that is the truth of it.

Australia has often been referred to as the lucky country. We have nearly every mineral required by an industrialised nation. We have sufficient coal, shale oil, shale gas, coal seam gas, natural-gas and oil reserves to supply the whole world for hundreds, if not thousands of years.

During his 30-40 years of also trekking around Australia, Jeremy Lee never shied away from declaring that our primary production was sufficient to feed, house and cloth a population twice the size of our current 27 million. With modern industrial technology, and the unrealised mineral reserves that Australia hold, this would be a modest or reserved declaration. Yet psychologically, or more realistically spiritually, Australians have been conditioned into thinking we are defeated and ripe for re-colonisation by another worldly power. This demoralisation of Australia's national psyche has occurred across this past 60 years due to the pursuit of a definite predetermined long-term policy objective. It hasn't occurred by chance.

I recently read the booklet 'Boche and Bolshevik' by Nesta Webster, which revealed the secret German banking interests behind Vladimir Ilyich Ulyanov, better known as Vladimir Lenin, and the Russian Revolution. Some media outlets are currently eulogising Lenin, however Nesta Webster reveals that he was on the payroll of German banking interests since 1915 and sat in Zürich, Switzerland while all the revolutionary ferment was being built up by others. He parachuted into Russia at the critical moment to do the bidding of his German banking masters, surprisingly able to travel unhindered by train across the European war zone front-lines.

What does this event tell you about the real power above national governments, even in the time of military conflict and the ravages of war, that both sides of the war will cease actions to allow the revolutionaries through: https://alor.org/Storage/Library/PDF/Webster\_N-Boche\_and\_Bolshevik.pdf

The Russian Revolution was created and financed by German central banksters for the purposes of exploiting the vast mineral wealth of that land mass. Similarly, the capture of Trotsky in Nova Scotia, Canada just prior to the beginning of the Russian Revolution was a telling historical point that also revealed the real-complicity of powers above national administrations, that released Trotsky and the other revolutionaries from incarceration, even though they possessed the printing plates for American currency. The real powers behind the Russian Revolution had unfettered access and control over all Allies and Axis administrations combined.

At the supposed collapse of the Communist regime – Perestroika/Glasnost (policy reform) during the late 1980s, it became public knowledge that a small group of central-banksters held full control of the mineral and industrial wealth of that nation and actually were the oligarchy that ruled over the people. Communism is a dictatorship ‘of’ the proletariat headed up by central banksters. It is not a dictatorship ‘by’ the proletariat.

Parliamentary Career of Peter Malinauskas

Following the parliamentary resignation of Bernard Finnigan on 12 November 2015, Peter Malinauskas filled the casual vacancy in the SA Legislative Council by a joint sitting of the Parliament of South Australia on 1 December 2015. Two months later, Premier Jay Weatherill indicated that Malinauskas could enter the Cabinet of South Australia in an early 2016 ministerial reshuffle, with media speculation and internal party talk suggesting Malinauskas could potentially become the next Labor Premier of South Australia, entering the House of Assembly through preselection as the next Labor candidate in Labor's safest lower house seat of Croydon, with claims that incumbent Michael Atkinson "has long been willing to vacate his seat to Malinauskas if he ever wanted it". Atkinson announced in February 2017 that he would be retiring from parliament as of the 2018 election. Malinauskas won the House of Assembly seat of Croydon at the 2018 election.

Malinauskas served in the Cabinet of South Australia in the Weatherill Ministry between January 2016 and March 2018, holding, at various times, ministerial portfolios with responsibility for police (2016–2017), correctional services (2016–2017), emergency services (2016–2017), road safety (2016–2017), health (2017–2018), and mental health and substance abuse (2017–2018).

Following the resignation of Jay Weatherill after the 2018 election defeat, a Labor caucus meeting on 9 April 2018 elected Malinauskas as Leader. He consequently became Leader of the Opposition, with former Education Minister Susan Close as his deputy. In March 2022, at the State election, Peter Malinauskas led the Labor Party to victory.

What has South Australian Premier Peter Malinauskas got to do with all of this you may ask? Everything. The globalist policy emanating from central banksters has not missed a beat under his Premiership. The relatively recent granting of land rights of 15,000 km<sup>2</sup> of mid-North South Australian land to the Ngadjuri people, coupled with the unwavering pursuit of a Voice to the SA Parliament through an apartheid-election-process later this year, shows me, that in spite of the Commonwealth referenda and every South Australian electorate showing a clear majority objecting to the Voice to Parliament, South Australian Premier Peter Malinauskas' objective is to continue on with this policy regardless. He is doing the bidding of his money masters:

<https://www.abc.net.au/news/2023-10-15/voice-to-parliament-yes-campaign-in-south-australia/102977090>

No doubt there may be a little bit of 'John Howard-we will never, never have a GST' in him, the pursuit of policy objective continues unabated. It is never about 'if'; as John Howard's Federal Liberal government demonstrated with the GST, it is always about 'how' to bring it about. <https://www.smh.com.au/politics/federal/it-was-heated-cabinet-papers-show-john-howard-s-government-grappled-with-how-to-introduce-the-gst-20201223-p56pv8.html>

Young global leaders permeated the Canadian administration to the point of greater than 50%, as Klaus Schwab bragged. If it looks like a rat, smells like a rat, and taste like a rat, therefore you can be confident it's not a cat nor a dog.

National Rally Against Reckless Renewables –

6 Feb 2024 – Parliament House 10am:

JoNova here:

Without doing your homework, this Canberra Rally appears as a perceived-beacon against globalism. However, after careful analysis I realised it is the Marxist Dialectics at play, to assist in bringing about monopoly and centralised power in the form of nuclear energy. Nuclear energy is a highly technical science of which UK, USA, China and Russia each hold a dominant position. Westinghouse has recently developed small nuclear packaged plants called Small Modular Reactors

(SMR's), being built in China mind you.

Both the UK and USA URLs are here for your consideration:

<https://www.rolls-royce.com/innovation/small-modular-reactors.aspx>

<https://www.reuters.com/world/us/westinghouse-unveils-small-modular-nuclear-reactor-2023-05-04/>

This is the end position of all environmental and green causes. The ruse of global warming - climate change, CO2 emissions, great-barrier coral-reef bleaching, deforestation, et cetera are all part of the preparatory work to transition away from our abundant hydrocarbons, incorrectly labelled fossil-fuels, towards monopoly, in this case nuclear energy.

Hydrocarbons are not the consequence of fossilised remains, but rather an outcome of the natural abiotic processes going on in the core of the earth. This process continues every day and has been going on since the earth existed. Great wonder as new hydrocarbon fields are regularly opened, not running out.

The meaning of descriptive words and their origin often tell the story of 'to whose advantage' these scripted and manicured 'words' are of benefit. It is always about money and political power, from the putrid breeding ground of totalitarianism.

Yes, it is frustrating that a lot of good people, in fact nearly all of those caught up in this Canberra Rally are misguided and being deliberately misled by the knowing-few to bring about a predetermined result - monopolised nuclear energy. But that is how it is.

This Canberra Rally is simply a practical demonstration against any type of mass action. The crowd has no reasoning, nor mind, but becomes 'easily-manipulated' by instinct and emotion – 'we descend to meet'. This is how Hitler brought about National Socialism in the militarised Wehrmacht Germany, by manipulating the crowds with his highly-skilled oratory. There was no room for the individual, nor reasoned consideration at your leisure – doing your own homework. This is the very thing that must be done by all those who wish to think for themselves, and not be a product of crowd-infused-propaganda – Saul Alinsky and Edward Bernays (twice over nephew of Sigmund Freud) were specialists in the field of mind manipulation, then Barrack Obama became their protégé.

The Worldwide Freedom Rally 17th February – 'Stop Spraying Our Sky' is of a similar calibre.

Democracy (majority vote) is not Constituted Representative Government

Over an ALOR National Weekend, Jeremy Lee and others were quizzed as to 'how to think'. After an extended moment of reflection Jeremy responded by saying 'all policy must be considered in the light of how it affects the individual'. How it affects the individual! When we consider the Canberra Rally and the pre-determined shift to nuclear energy, consideration must be given to the effect on the ground of monopoly controlled electrical energy, as against locally controlled and physically abundant forms of solar energy to generate electrical power which includes hydrocarbons. Hydrocarbons are produced because of gravitational forces and heat energy as is the nature of the world we live in.

The previously mentioned sugar-cane power generation up and down the coast of northern New South Wales and Queensland, illustrates a decentralised approach to this vital utility. If Newcastle or Brisbane decided to shut down their power generators, local communities could simply fire up their own power generation and keep going with minimal interruption by the disruption from the major suppliers. From a strategic perspective alone, this makes good sense. Don't put all your eggs into just one basket.

Nesta Webster's booklet 'Boche and Bolshevik' references the socialising of Germany by 'nationalised' medicine and insurance. The German people became reliant on the government for almost everything. Deconstructing the self-reliant, resilient, and independent spirit was integral to this socialising. It is in concentrating on this area of reconstituting this self-reliant, resilient, and independent spirit that we can rebuild our nation.

The Nesta Webster's booklet also reinforces the consolidation of German-controlling-power within banking and industry. The banks were permitted to buy vast shareholdings in industry/manufacturing, and because all industry operates on overdrafts, the banks were readily able to monopolise their position, by creating money out of nothing – ex nihilo.

Monopoly and mainstream media orbit around each other. They are concentric. While we hear or read what appears to be opposing points of view, what is not readily appreciated is that this perceived dialectical clash ultimately leads on to further monopoly.

The list of speakers for the Canberra Rally was available from a Craig Kelly 'Telegram' post.

Would those attending and speaking be so readily committed to proposing further utility-monopoly, had this end objective of monopoly been brought to their attention prior to this rally? Some may not have even considered the ramifications of this policy as to 'how it affects the individual'. In the end that is what this is about, promoting a solution without thinking through the ramifications towards the individual. Second rate experts directing policy that first-rate experts will have no qualms 'blaming them for the outcome'.

What is noteworthy is that Matthew Condon writing for The Australian, is reporting of the upcoming event in Canberra to rally troops to listen to a sprinkling of Liberal, Nationals, PHON, Craig Kelly, Bob Katter, Alan Moran, Prof Peter Ridd and a host of others. Such a variety of differing persons and some supposedly antagonistic political parties coming together against 'Reckless Renewables'. This crowd is unknowingly being played like a fiddle to the benefit of nuclear-monopolists.

The Greens and Environmentalists were covering themselves in human excrement in their protests against Roxby Downs, the open-cut Ranger, and Jabiluka uranium mining. Yet the noise is that this is the only viable re-resolution to anthropogenic global warming:
<https://www.theguardian.com/australia-news/2022/oct/09/walk-away-traditional-owners-defend-kakadu-against-a-new-push-from-uranium-miners>

Media speculation is reporting that our PM has been across to the Palace to recommend a replacement for the retiring Governor General David Hurley for mid-2024. The speculated short-list is from disenfranchised Voice activists. What does this say about our Federal Government regarding the decision of the Australian people about the Voice from the Referenda?

Policy continues regardless of the people's clear choice:
<https://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-13017817/Governor-General-Albanese-appointment-discussions.html>

Further, senior Liberals are calling for the re-introduction of the Cashless Debit Card to remote WA Aboriginal communities:

<https://www.abc.net.au/news/2024-02-02/liberals-back-cdc-reintroduction-remote-western-australia/103413970>

Like Labor, the Liberal Party see no wrong in centralised administration for remote communities. As if by some miracle those Canberra bureaucrats will achieve a differing result from what those communities are already experiencing on the ground as a consequence of their remote administration. Those communities need to manage themselves as they see fit. If they want the CDC then let them choose it. If they want some other form of management to alleviate crime, drugs, pornography and alcohol abuse, and rampant violence, then again let them choose how to manage it.

Just as the Germans experienced lack of a self-reliant, resilient, and independent spirit by socialising that nation, so it is with the remote Aboriginals requiring exactly the same self-reliant, resilient, and independent spirit to manage themselves. A problem is not resolved by expanding its borders. Problems are best resolved by those who are experiencing the effects on the ground. This does not mean that there shouldn't be consultation from experts, but it does mean that the final decision must rest with those individuals in community. The Liberals are not helping at all. They are simply promoting greater reliance on central government which is the very opposite of what is needed. The Liberals, not just in effect but in reality, are promoting socialism.

These things do not occur by chance but are all part of a long-term policy-objective to bring about global governance, with central banksters at the head. Liberal and Labor work together while presenting their policy-positions as antagonistic, which they are not.

The Wind Always Blows From The Far Left

Some readers may feel I have it in for the Liberal/National Coalition in Australia. Each week my research causes me to jar at the number of times that the Coalition has so badly let down genuine conservatives. The 'Get Big or Get Out' mantra, or the 'North-South Dialogue', each were instrumental in the de-industrialisation of Australia that handed our primary industry and our vast mineral reserves across to two of the most industrialised nations in the world today, China and India. These policies never changed one iota under later Coalition led Governments. In fact there was a private agreement between Coalition and Labor that a bipartisan approach be directed to immigration, increasing to the point this year of some 700,000 new arrivals. The silence, even from the cross-benches is almost deafening.

The Coalition gave us the 'No Jab - No Play, No Jab - No Pay' - which compelled medical procedures be inflicted on our young with the psychological leverage of withholding parts of the family allowance to young mothers. I can't visualise any thing of greater evil than this policy, except perhaps abortion up to full term. Dare we look under that rug for the Coalition's position?

The Coalition gave us the TPP & Covid 19 lockdown, with massive injections of government funds to hold businesses and individuals together. This expansion of what has now become irredeemable debt is Coalition policy. Most media, other forms of sports-entertainment, and I might say here education (including private education), are so heavily subsidised from government funds that resistance to the rainbow, cancel culture, or environmental policies becomes increasingly difficult to manage. The transnational players under the TPP Agreement, place so much pressure through their massive shareholdings, that industry finds any resistance to these same policies also increasingly difficult to manage. Policies like this are being driven from above, with international finance at the head.

Land Rights simply allows transnational corporations virtually unfettered access to our vast mineral reserves with little compensation, except to those select few.

The Coalition and Labor tag-teamed their administrations to give us the Franklin Dam High Court decision to unfetter the Federal Government from any limitations imposed by our Commonwealth Constitution through External Affairs Agreements. Enough said.

We all must find ways to regain control of our governments, apart from the once every 1,000 days vote. The ball is squarely in our court.

If it is not now, then it is already too late. ***
