

Defy and Win (Grant Bird) ($15.00 Posted)

The 1991 wool crash turned the Author's life upside down. The Bank's methods, threads and arrogance in systematically treating good families like dirt and destroying their pride and dignity was unbelievable. This book is a result of "walking over the glass and feeling the pain" This is not a book of theory, but a step by step recipe book, of HOW TO SAVE THE FAMILY FARM!

Debt is a form of slavery. Banks have put rural Australia in a position that with the slightest seasonal downturn there is no surplus set aside to handle bad seasonal times. Deregulation gave us probably the worst banking system in the world-we have an industry exploitive in its nature with no rules whatsoever. Banks "make you and break you" and maintain profits by giving and taking their credit.

We believe that this act is illegal, immoral, exploitative and deceitful, therefore we do not apologize for defying the Banks when they attack farmers.

Major Clifford Hugh Douglas,

M.I.Mech.E., M.I.E.E., consulting engineer, economist, author, and founder of the Douglas Social Credit Movement, was born in 1879 and died in 1952. Among other posts which he held in his earlier years were those of engineer with the —

Canadian General Electric company;

Peterborough, Canada, — Assistant Engineer,

Lachine Rapids Hydraulic Construction;

Deputy Chief Electrical Engineer, Buenos

Aires, and Pacific Railway;

Chief Engineer and Manager in India British

Westinghouse Company;

Assistant Superintendent, Royal Aircraft

Factory Farnborough (GB).

R.A.F. (Reserve).

After retiring from his engineering career, he and his wife ran a small yacht-building yard on Southampton Water for several years. The combination of beauty with functional efficiency in a successfully designed racing yacht had a special appeal for him.

When he lived in an old water-mill in Hampshire he used the water-wheel to turn a dynamo which lit and warmed the house as well as providing power for lathes and other tools. Later, when he moved to Scotland, many of his friends and followers remember helping to build his small hydro-electric-powered house, sited on the local burn which ran through his land. Since decentralisation of economic power was of the essence of his teaching, it should be put on record that he practised what he preached.

One of his most interesting jobs, just before the 1914 War, was that of conducting preliminary experimental work and preparing plans and specifications for the electrical work on the London Post Office Railway, with later supervision of the installation of plant in what was to be one of the earliest examples of complete automation in the history of engineering.

From Economic Democracy First edition (1920), by CH Douglas

Institutions exist to serve Individuals

Accepting this statement (systems were made for man, and not men for systems)

as a basis of constructive effort, it seems clear that all forms, whether of government, industry or society must exist contingently to the furtherance of the principles contained in it. If a State system can be shown to be inimical to them it must go;

if social customs hamper their continuous expansion - they must be modified; if unbridled industrialism checks their growth, then industrialism must be reined in.

That is to say, we must build up from the individual, not down from the State.
