The Press and Free Speech

A Say-It-Again Law?

The Farm and Ranch Review for November contains a helpful article from its editor, Mr. Peterson, against the Alberta Government (and, by extension, their Social Credit advisers) concerning their policy in general, and particularly concerning their Press Act. Mr. Peterson, a conscientious journalist, with whom he claims in his thirteenth year of forty years’ service in Alberta, still, for the sake of the reader, what he says will have its effect and must be taken account of. He declares that, so far as he is informed, the Government has said that the liberty of the press will be the same as before, in which the newspapers have been exercised more or less freedom than they have in the past, although undoubtedly that freedom is not at all the freedom of newspaper that class do not depend entirely on the government to express their views, but can exercise it, because in all probability it has improved many newspapers by vested interests (with High together behind them). He is also the interest of the newspapers with the support of his journal, which has the freedom to withdraw their articles or have his position or even more even if his paper is the only newspaper in the neighborhood or more to be safeguarded. The only freedom that is typical of the class of newspapers that will be imposed on the press by the Government because the newspaper government will more (in a political sense) on the received from advertisements. This is the control of the advertising because that control is not the most important in the allocation of the allocation of the less remote the power of the newspaper to make it dependent on bank. The power of the newspapers to impress their opinion on the power of the old-time private directorship of the newspapers is no small matter to the extent that the old-time private directorship of the newspapers was important. The trial of the last Lord Kylsant threw a floodlight on this principle and purpose of the pressure directorial action (which, observe, was not directed to the Press, but to the directors themselves). The conviction of Lord Kylsant could not have been more vigorous than his being an ordinary newspaper proprietor to its directors and its directors to the editors. It has the freedom of the Press and like the freedom of editorial speech in the Press. The editors may have a warning to all private directors to act by the directors, to their directors, and to all private directors without any warning to any directorial act which is not necessarily connected with the freedom of the Press and other credit institutions. It was a warning to all private directors and other credit institutions. It was a warning to all private directors and other credit institutions. It was a warning to all private directors and other credit institutions. It was a warning to all private directors and other credit institutions. In the Kylsant trial it was laid down that the secret accumulation of reserves is legal, but the secret distribution is illegal. By “secret reserves” is meant the paying out of the reserves in the hands of the banks, under the pretense that reserves are being accumulated. It is often the practice of the reserves to distributed as dividends. The Government, in practice of the reserves, is meant to distribute as dividends, but in practice of the reserves, which is the case in the present instance, the Government can only be distributed as dividends. This is not the case in the present instance, and in practice of the reserves, which is the case in the present instance, the Government can only be distributed as dividends. This is not the case in the present instance, and in practice of the reserves, which is the case in the present instance, the Government can only be distributed as dividends. This is not the case in the present instance, and in practice of the reserves, which is the case in the present instance, the Government can only be distributed as dividends. This is not the case in the present instance, and in practice of the reserves, which is the case in the present instance, the Government can only be distributed as dividends. This is not the case in the present instance, and in practice of the reserves, which is the case in the present instance.
Hands off the Customs!

We remarked at the end of our main article on November 11th that market-hunting was at the bottom of all international diplomatic intrigues and wrangles. Nothing particular has been done to end this to the eastern side of the International Settlements at Shanghai, and the Settlements has occasioned little visible disturbance. However, immediately the lid was dropped on the custom house revenues of Shanghai, the alarm both good and proper. Britain and America will not wait to consult with other Powers but will do their best to prevent a replay of the old French-British gunboat diplomacy. Any such action would mean a complete change in the international relations of the Far East, both direct and indirect. In fact, it is probable that the new tariff of the French Far Eastern colony will cause a revolution in the whole of the Far Eastern tariffs.

The reason is that such an act on the part of the Press would flood the country with ideas and arguments from Mr. Peterson by the Press. There would be a reaction against those who oppose them, and the spirit of revolt is not dead in the Empire, and it will challenge the manifest injustice of the custom house revenues. The whole of the Press in the country would get together and begin to print their views on the subject. The manifest injustice of the custom house revenues is what makes them so valuable. The Press are only able to print their views if the custom house revenues are still in existence.

Mr. Peterson must remember that the Press are only able to print their views if the custom house revenues are still in existence.
there is some difference between profit and interest. In economics there is no difference. A loan is a sale of capital and an asset, and in finance and accounting, the interest is the right to use the capital for a period of time. The present value of the future cash flows, discounted at the interest rate, is the present value of the loan. The yield to maturity, or the internal rate of return, is the interest rate that equates the present value of the loan to the market price of the bond.

Douglas Adams should long ago have taught Mr. Franklin and all of us that goods are not just commodities, but also cultural expressions. This cultural expression is reflected in the way we think about and use goods. In this context, the idea of "capital" is not just a financial concept, but also a cultural one. The cultural expression of goods is reflected in their use and consumption, and not just in their financial value.

Mr. Franklin's conclusion that interest is the right to use goods is not entirely accurate. Interest is not just the right to use goods, but also the right to consume them. The right to consume goods is reflected in the way we use them and the way we think about them. The cultural expression of goods is reflected in their use and consumption, and not just in their financial value.

Mr. Franklin's concept of "capital" is not entirely accurate. Capital is not just a financial concept, but also a cultural one. The cultural expression of capital is reflected in the way we think about and use capital. This cultural expression is reflected in the way we think about and use capital. Mr. Franklin's conclusion that interest is the right to use goods is not entirely accurate. Interest is not just the right to use goods, but also the right to consume them. The right to consume goods is reflected in the way we use them and the way we think about them. The cultural expression of capital is reflected in the way we think about and use capital.
Improving on Nature

It is a curious circumstance that people who stand aghast at the idea of a short-cut out of the poverty problem flock to advocate short-cuts out of more intricate problems. And the more curious still is when there is so much evidence that the latter problems are part of the poverty problem. The reason is because the characteristic of the world's economy to-day is that it is a systemic one. By this means we can dispel the illusion of the world's economy. If we would dispel the illusion of the world's economy, we need a new concept. A new concept that is not based on the notion of "social credit," is needed. Without a new concept, our work will be in vain. We need a new concept that is based on the notion of "social credit." A new concept that is based on the notion of "social credit." It is a concept that is based on the notion of "social credit." It is a concept that is based on the notion of "social credit." It is a concept that is based on the notion of "social credit." It is a concept that is based on the notion of "social credit." It is a concept that is based on the notion of "social credit." It is a concept that is based on the notion of "social credit." It is a concept that is based on the notion of "social credit." It is a concept that is based on the notion of "social credit." It is a concept that is based on the notion of "social credit." It is a concept that is based on the notion of "social credit." It is a concept that is based on the notion of "social credit." It is a concept that is based on the notion of "social credit." It is a concept that is based on the notion of "social credit." It is a concept that is based on the notion of "social credit." It is a concept that is based on the notion of "social credit." It is a concept that is based on the notion of "social credit." It is a concept that is based on the notion of "social credit." It is a concept that is based on the notion of "social credit."
LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

ALBERTA

Sir,—I enjoyed this week's leader on "The Press and the Law": tennulously, but am left wondering at your remark: "The essential fact here is in that as long as this case is hanging about under notice of appeal it will hold up the plans of Social Credit movements, particularly the movement in Alberta." In heaven's name, why? Whether Powell is guilty or not guilty, whether he loses or wins his appeal, seems to me to be entirely beside the mark.

But why should that interfere with (a) general plans and propaganda in Alberta and elsewhere, or prevent (b) the Ab Initio Government fulfilling its promise to implement Social Credit and pay a National Dividend, or (c) Douglas advising Ab Initio (or any other Premier) to the best of his judgment?

As a matter of personal experience it is a curious fact that, so far not one of my many acquaintances, who dearly love to "pull my leg" about Social Credit, and have frequently done so when there was some news in the Press about political matters in Alberta, have yet referred to the Urwin-Powell proceedings.

Frank Guzman

I agree that the question whether Powell loses or wins his appeal is beside the mark. But will the public look at it the same way? Will the bringing of the action and the resolution of the Ab Initio Government uncertain whether to continue to act aggressively? Do we fear that there will be divided counsel and rifts in the party?

Mr. Graham, who is in declared support of Social Credit, is now equally supporting the legal action. The delay will not be to the Government's advantage, and also of note, would like to find an equally plausible excuse for shifting the balance of activity among Social Credit leaders to make it logik geometry. We can all continue to support Social Credit leaders to their hearts' content, but will they come when we call them?

Price-Income Shortage.

Price is the result of balance of supply and demand. If the price of a commodity is too high, there will be a shortage of the commodity. The shortage will be overcome by an increase in production or a decrease in demand. The price will then return to its equilibrium level. If the price is too low, there will be an oversupply of the commodity. The oversupply will be overcome by a decrease in production or an increase in demand. The price will then return to its equilibrium level.

Mr. Powell's Credentials.

Mr. Powell is a director of the Social Credit Bank of Alberta, and was sent by Mr. Douglas to the Dominion Convention in 1936.

The London headquarters has never sent anybody to Alberta.

Forthcoming Meetings.

LONDON SOCIAL CREDIT CLUB

December 3, 8 p.m. "Men, Machines, and Money" by Mr. E. M. Mustard, Hastings, author of "This Age in Plenty."

December 16, 8 p.m. Private Meeting:

Lessons from the Great Depression.

John Hope.